

WEDNESDAY

OF COURSE it stands to reason that any affair given by Mr. and Mrs. E. D. Tenney would be both artistic and beautiful, but the several hundred society folk who attended their silver wedding anniversary on Thursday evening were hardly prepared for the fairyland which greeted them both in the house and in the temporary pavilion erected on the lawn. Words are poor things when it comes to describing the exquisite blossoms and plants, the artful draperies, glistening lights—which, combined with the beautiful gowns of the fair sex, the soft melodies of two bands, made it the most brilliant affair of many years. To the many kamasinas present it brought back the olden days of the monarchy when the hospitality was of the same lavish limitless order. But we must begin at the beginning. In the house there was no set color scheme—silver was combined with all the tints of the rainbow reflected in the silky petals of fairylike blossoms. In the reception room orchids were used entirely. Exquisite French baskets linked with fluffy rainbows of tulle held long sprays of the lavender and white variety. Over the door was quirked a silvered Chinese basket-sifter through the trellis of which crept the larger blossoms of deep mauve. Every nook and cranny was filled with these exotic blooms—white, purple, delicate yellow, speckled, pink in bowls and baskets. One's nostrils were filled with their rare aroma. In the dining room were great bowls of white roses and lilies and superb baskets of maidenhair. American Beauty roses converted the hall into a fragrant pink bowery. They rose in tall pillars—hundreds of them, lifting their perfumed heads through veils of green maidenhair. In the music room were the many baskets of flowers sent in congratulation of the happy event. Such lovely flowers as they were—varieties that we seldom see here in Hawaii. There were beautiful clusters of white hyacinths, baskets of golden jonquils and violets, wonderful bowls of sweet peas and pansies—flowers that are as rare to us as our own tropical blooms are to northern climes. Perhaps the most charming bit of this modern fairyland was the pavilion adjoining the lawn where the younger folk danced. This was done in cherry blossoms and ferns and surrounded by palms. At one corner was the gnarled trunk and wide spreading branches of an old cherry tree heavily laden with pink blossoms. In other parts of the room were further branches augmented with baskets of begonias and misty knots of tulle. In the center were suspended great baskets of maidenhair from which in turn hung gray-green Hawaiian air plants linked with pink and green tulle. Mr. Ernest Parker and Miss Jessie Kennedy were responsible for the beauties of the pavilion while to Mrs. John Walker was the credit of the house.

Mr. and Mrs. Tenney received in the drawing room with Mrs. Harriet Bodrero, who had been bridesmaid at their wedding twenty-five years ago, and Mr. E. Paxon Bishop, who had been best man. Mrs. Tenney was exquisitely gowned in white charmeuse over a foundation of shadow lace. The satin draperies were of the new, modish fashion, "hiked up" in back to show the lace at the bottom. There were huge side panniers of white tulle over the lace. The bodice was trimmed with passerette of seed pearls and opals. Mrs. Bodrero wore yellow charmeuse draped over a foundation of gold tulle and made with a single eccentric panner of gold tulle. The waist was of gold lace over yellow tulle. Most distinguished of Mr. and Mrs. Tenney's guests was Her Majesty Queen Liliuokalani, who had also been a guest at the wedding in 1889. She was gowned in rich black lace with beautiful diamond ornaments.

Playing many of the same old-fashioned refrains that it had at the original ceremony was the Royal Hawaiian band. A stringed orchestra played for the dancing. During the evening Miss Nora Swamy gave an interpretation of Grieg's Anitra's Dance. Mrs. Elsa Howard playing the accompaniment. Miss Rose Herbert and Mr. Vernon Tenney, who have become experts in the new dance, gave a graceful exhibition of the Mautrice tango. Mr. Paul Isenberg sang two songs very charmingly. Toward midnight a delicious supper was served, the guests being served at small tables under a huge marquee on the lawn.

One was impressed with the smartness and elegance of the gowns worn. All of fashion's latest whims and fancies were in evidence—the minaret skirt, the bustle, the apron front, bouffant hips, transparent bodices, medall collars, Bulgarian girdles, mango slippers and the thousand little novelties from Paris which make week by week the most studied of all magazines. Miss Wilhelmina Tenney's honor was charming. It was of white Charles B lace hemmed with rhinestones and draped with gold lace and yellow tulle. With it she wore a corsage of baby roses in shades of yellow, blue and pink. Mrs. Robert Lewers looked handsome in a gown of black satin with silver embroidery. Miss Lurline Matson was one of the most stunningly gowned of the young er girls. Her costume was of emerald green charmeuse embellished in gold made panner style over an under drupe of coral colored brocade. Over this was a saucy little minaret skirt of black tulle. The bodice was trimmed with rhinestones and fastened at the back with a huge butterfly bow of black tulle. Mrs. C. B. Cooper wore a handsome gown of salmon pink satin embellished in gold and silver and silver bullion and trimmed with the selfsame tone of pink silk tulle. Mrs. John Walker was charmingly dressed in old rose charmeuse, the skirt made with one of these modish puff effects about the waist. Mrs. George Herbert was in yellow with shadow lace. Her daughter, Miss Rose Herbert, wore lavender charmeuse with a minaret skirt of shadow lace coming quite low in back. The bodice was trimmed with lace, and passerette with butterfly bows in front and back of lavender tulle, caught with rhinestone buckles. Mrs. Fred Macfarlane wore one of the handsomest gowns there. It was very Parisian in its combination of blues and black. The skirt was made from the waist to the knee of shaded chiffon from dark to light blue. From the bottom of this came a short draped skirt of black crepe meteor. Over this was a tunic like drupe of black net embroidered in gold bullion. The lower part of the bodice was of blue shaded chiffon covered with gold embroidery. The upper part was of white chiffon veiled with black tulle and trimmed with strings of large black beads. Mrs. Montgomery Macomb wore white satin with garnitures of rose point lace. Mrs. T. H. Petrie was in pale pink with flounces of white lace embroidered with rhinestones and a wide Bulgarian girdle of pink satin. Mrs. J. P. Cooke wore yellow charmeuse with a gold brocade overdress. For a corsage piece she wore a deep yellow rose. Mrs. Faxon Bishop was in white with an overdress of black net embroidered in silver. Miss Alice Hopper was charming in porcelain blue satin with an overdress of black lace. Mrs. C. G. Ballentyne wore a handsome gown of rose pink satin with flounces of black embroidered in silver and large panniers of black tulle. The bodice of pink was veiled with tulle and silver embroidery. Mrs. Gerrit Wilder was charming in yellow brocade with a bodice of shadow lace. Mrs. Arthur Brown was very strikingly gowned in flame colored charmeuse. This had a short overskirt of velvet brocade of the same color edged with fur and coming down in back in a queer little tail-like effect. The bodice was of shadow lace. Miss Violet Makee wore a beautiful gown of white lace over satin with touches of burnt orange velvet. Miss Margaret Peterson was in yellow with shadow lace. Mrs. J. R. Galt wore soft gray crepe meteor with self-toned trimming. Mrs. James McCandless wore a lovely frock of apple green moire with a bodice of cream colored lace. Mrs. Edward Carpenter was striking in a gown of white charmeuse embellished with burnt orange velvet. Mrs. Walter Macfarlane wore pink satin veiled with Alice blue chiffon. Miss Betty Case was in deep yellow satin, the skirt made with two minaret flounces of wide yellow embroidery, the waist of white tulle. Miss Thelma Murphy wore emerald green charmeuse with a minaret skirt of Bulgarian chiffon edged with fur. Mrs. Fritz Henshaw was most attractive in a frock of scarlet chiffon smartly made with lots of little puffs and ruffles. Mrs. Alfred Castle was another of wear scarlet. Her gown of charmeuse being softened with trimmings of point lace. Mrs. Fred Damon was charming in a frock of old rose charmeuse with a bodice of shadow lace. Mrs. M. E. Grossman wore an exquisite frock of filmy white chiffon with lace and rhinestone trimming. Mrs. Walter Dillingham wore white tulle over satin. Mrs. Arthur Rice was in blue with black lace. Miss Mary von Holt wore a charming frock of blue charmeuse with a bodice of shadow lace and a butterfly bow of black tulle.
