The Palace of Education of the Panama-Pacific International exposition at San Francisco in 1915 will contain the largest and most exhaustive child welfare exhibit ever assembled. The department of education, under the direction of James A. Barr, will be devoted to the study of child culture, rather than to the exploitation of pedagogic theories. A large proportion of the space within the palace will be subdivided into model class rooms in which children of various nations participating will be put through actual class work under the supervision of experts.

An International Congress of Authors and Journalists, at which some of the most famous thinkers of the age will attend, will convene upon the grounds of the Panama-Pacific International exposition in 1915. Among the questions considered by the congress will be the adopting of uniform international copyright laws, and the arbitration among authors of playwright disputes.
