ARNOLD DALY IS FORCED TO QUIT "PLAYERS' CLUB"

He Introduced Fair Opera Singer in Man's Attire at Smoker Last Winter

[By Late Mall]

NEW YORK.—Arnold Daly is no longer of the "Players' Club." He resigned because he was called to account for having smuggled Bessie Abbott, the opera singer, into one of the club's smokers last winter, and because he refused to explain to the satisfaction of the directors why he had broken a precedent which has endured since Edwin Booth founded the club years ago.

Daly was not ousted, although he is out. Furthermore, he did offer an explanation, but he appended lines which ran something like this: "If my explanation is not sufficient I have the honor to tender my resignation to take effect forthwith." His resignation was accepted unanimously by the directors.

Women are sometimes allowed in the historic Players' Clubhouse in Gramercy Square. Every year the club has an anniversary celebration and all the members are invited to bring their friends of the other sex. But except on that occasion and on two occasions of special invitation no woman ever before has been inside the sacred portal. Bernhard was the one woman who was invited. She came in the afternoon and all the members did her honor. And again Lady Forbes-Robertson was specially invited.

The first Saturday night of each month is given over to a smoker by the club. No one but members may attend, except such men as are invited by the chairman. And each smoker night the club elects a different chairman. He has the privilege of inviting outsiders, but not the privilege of inviting women.

Back in January Daly was elected chairman of the smoker, and that night, according to the directors, he brought as his guest a young person whom he introduced as Signor Bettino Abbotto, tenor, who had been discovered by an impresario, but not yet revealed. "Signor Abbotto" took part in the entertainment, and took a pleasing part. He sang to the high enjoyment of the members. He was clothed in becoming evening clothes, which were tight in spots, but it was not until well on into the evening that it was discovered the signor was not what he appeared to be.

Next day there was gossip in the clubhouse that a woman had been smuggled in to the smoker in men's clothes. It was said the woman was Bessie Abbott, the opera singer. The talk came to the ears of the directors, and it was decided to investigate. F. F. MacKay, one of the directors, said today: "These smokers are for women. No woman ever attended one until Daly brought Miss Abbott to that one."
