

PLAN OF PAYING NATIONAL GUARD MEN GOOD THING

Col. Johnson, Adjutant-General of Hawaii, Approves Congressman Hay's Idea

"It is a most welcome thing, and the most practical means of building up the National Guard ever devised," said Col. Samuel I. Johnson, adjutant-general, National Guard of Hawaii, today, on being asked his opinion of the plan advocated by Representative James Hay of Virginia to pay national guard members a regular salary, equal to 25 per cent. of that paid soldiers of the regular army, which was outlined in last night's Associated Press despatches.

SOLDIER BREAKS KNIFE BLADE IN CUTTING SCRAPE

In a cutting scrape at twilight at 9:30 o'clock last night, in which four white soldiers of Fort Shafter assaulted a negro soldier from Schofield, two of the white men were cut when the negro drew a jackknife to defend himself.

MANY NATIONS FURNISH GRIST TO POLICE MILL

From Russian to Chinese and Korean, Cases Given Quick Disposal at Court

Twenty-odd nationalities meet in Honolulu, as the Pan-Pacific Club is fond of stating at its banquets, but the only place where the 20-odd shake hands daily is the police court. Seated on the prisoners' bench in Judge Monsarrat's court this morning was a motley crew which the police and Detective Captain Arthur McDuffie's sleuths had gathered in to the fold of the law. Andro Gregorlesky, Russian, sat at the left of the bench, a huge, swarthy man with spotted face and low forehead disappearing under jagged black hair. Pung Chew, a gray-haired Chinese, sat next to him, a lean-faced fellow with blank eyes that studied the rail in front of him. A Porto Rican leaned over the rail with his eyes on the judge, a man with a coal black skin and a cadaverous face quite at odds with the glitter of the eyes. Antonio Acosta, another Porto Rican, sat with a semblance of a grin on his face and a great white bandage over his head. The Portuguese virago, Camella, a witness in the case of Acosta, sat near and blinked at the courtroom—and Kim Don Hung, a little Korean, sat motionless with his head jutting out as if his neck were deformed, and an occasional sign of life when his black eyes flashed up and down the room one moment, and the next minute had gone blank again. And while these men sat waiting, Mrs. George Kekuewa was on the witness stand testifying that her husband had brutally beaten her. The "brute," as she called him, was a slender, aged Hawaiian who hobbled out of the prisoner's box with an enormous shoe on one foot and no shoe at all on the other, and on his face the dim weariness of the habitual drunkard. He was sentenced to one month in jail. Antonio Acosta, charged with assault and battery on a woman, Camella, developed a sad, sad tale in the court, showing how he had once been thrown into the river by Camella and how when he was passing the next day she had laughed at him and said that she could do the same thing again. One glance at Camella, as she sat arms akimbo in the courtroom, was sufficient warranty that she could carry out her threat. But Acosta had rashly rushed in where "angels fear to tread," and he saved the valorous Camella upon the cheek. "At this point in the testimony Camella grinned broadly. But even so Antonio performed this valorous feat, a one-legged man who had been talking with Camella, heaved up a brand new and very solid crutch and brought it down upon the unfortunate's head. To add to Acosta's misery he was immediately charged with assault and battery and taken to the police station and the anti-climax came when he was fined $5 this morning. Attorney Chillingworth pointed out that the man's chief crime was not the assault upon the willowy Camella, but his established character. The evidence concerning the little Korean brought out the fact that he had casually picked up a meter belonging to the Mutual Telephone Company, of the value of $4. John Wo acted as interpreter for him and repeated his unemotional words to the court. He claimed to have only lifted the meter in order to get at a bottle which was lying under it. Judge Monsarrat smiled. He was proven to be an old offender and finally stood before the judge with his square moveless face jutting forward to listen: "Is he a married man?" asked Monsarrat. "No," said Detective John Wo, who stood beside the prisoner, and then after another glance at the yellow eyes, "But he's—but he's pretty well engaged to opium." The sentence was placed at two months, the next case was called, and the kaleidoscope whirled on.

AKANA VOICES GRIEVANCES OF NON-WHITE RACES

In Straight-From-the-Shoulder Talk at Pan-Pacific Lunch, Pleads for "Square Deal"

"Do you want the brown races to be good citizens?" said Rev. Akako Akana, speaking at the Pan-Pacific luncheon this noon; "then help me and help every intelligent man who is not white to answer these questions which I have heard from men of half a dozen nationalities in this very city. "Why is Mr. Smith interested in me on Sunday, and why does he grow absent-minded when he passes me on the street on any other day? "When a white person is alone he recognizes me. When I speak to him in company he blushes. "Has a white man a right to say to me: Don't waste time on stenography. Cultivate your muscles and go out on a plantation? "If people show that they do not want my society should not I lift myself above any need of association with them? "These are some of the questions which I have heard casually on the streets. They are indicative of a feeling which is deeper than words. You cannot win over the yellow races by education. You cannot make them citizens by appealing to their intellects alone. Every great thought has a great emotional basis, and unless that basis exists, then you will not have the thought. If you do not have the great feeling of friendship as a beginning, you will never establish between the colored man and the white the desire for mutual exchange of thoughts, ambitions, and affections which must be the basis of good citizenship. "Show me a flag waving in the air and tell me that I must love that flag and I will laugh at you. But show me over the heights of the city a noble partner to whose erection the people of my race have given their minds and the efforts of their souls and bodies; let us establish a heritage of stirring memories which you may hold in common with us, and then we will become good citizens, not because we have convinced ourselves that it is the reasonable thing to do, but because it is the noble, the essential thing." "Civilization steps westward," said Dr. D. Scudder, in his short talk, "and where civilization turns its face we must turn ours. Throughout the United States there is a feeling that above all the races of the world the yellow are incapable of taking up the work and the duties of American citizenship. There is a dim and a blind feeling that though other races may be educated up to this standard, an essential bar keeps out the yellow man. "But facts prove that there is no foundation for this. When we face the great evidence of facts boldly and unafraid we find that it is like the child's boogaboo in the dark—it does not exist. Why, your average person in the states looks upon the yellow man as a sort of queer mechanism that may think but cannot feel. "But I say that which all of us know, that the yellow man has our loves, our desires, our appreciation of the beautiful and the good, our willingness to sacrifice for the intangible glories of our country's service all that we have and hold. Then why can he not become a good citizen? It is folly and blindness to say that he cannot. Civilization goes west like the sun, and instead of turning our backs upon this new old world which is coming up to front our eyes, let us look these peoples in the face. Let us admit that they are human beings with hearts full of blood as warm as ours; with brains as active; with souls as eager. Let us open our arms to them, that when the time comes, as in the course of events it must come, when we need their help, they will open their arms to us in turn. "Here we have what might be a danger present before us. In a very few years the native born Hawaiian-Japanese and Chinese will compose a majority of the citizens of these islands. But we who have lived with them know that this is nothing to fear. Our only duty is to give to their hands all the implements of good citizenship. Let us see that in the schools they become proficient in political science and civil law, and let us be sure that they know enough of American history to enter into our memories of greatness in the past, and inspiration for the future." Speaking immediately after Dr. D. Scudder, as a representative of the Hawaiian-Chinese youth, Kim Tong Ho spoke to point out a few of the things which the local Chinese were doing. He did not deal in emotional generalities, but spoke straight from the shoulder, dealing in facts. He told of how the Chinese company in the Hawaiian National Guard had been mustered to its full number in 48 hours. He told how a Chinese boy was making the trip with the National Guard rifle team which leaves for Florida tomorrow. He spoke of things with a quiet earnestness which was more convincing than metaphors. "Give us a chance to work here where we were born," he said in part. "We are ready and willing to love this new country as our fathers loved old China. Do not doubt that we are capable of forming new attachments. All men want to live, to grow up, and to labor on the soil where they were born. Ours is that desire. Do not raise bars against us. Even now the best young men we send from Hawaii to the United States for a college education return here and find that there is no scope for their human desires to have a country which they can serve and a country which they
