

TAKE ROAD CASE FOR DECISION TO SUPREME COURT

Appeal Filed Against Judge Stuart's Ruling in "Maintenance and Repairs" Fight

The much-talked-about road injunction suit against the city and county has been reopened with the filing in the supreme court by Raymond C. Brown, petitioner in the original case, of an appeal from the decision rendered by Circuit Judge T. B. Stuart, which decision dissolved the temporary injunction.

In his complaint, the petitioner sought to restrain the city and county and other respondents from further proceeding on certain road work in Honolulu, the contention being that the work was in excess of maintenance and repairs. Judge Stuart found for the respondents after a lengthy hearing, and pointed out in his decision that, in his opinion, the road work in question was maintenance and repairs, and not reconstruction.

The roads mentioned in the original complaint included that portion of Beretania street extending from Metcalf street to the junction of King and Beretania streets; on Queen street from the Nuuanu stream to the prison road, and the approach to the Hackfeld wharf.

Aside from the city and county, the respondents in the case were Mayor John Lane, the members of the board of supervisors, L. M. Whitehouse, city and county engineer, Charley Clark, then road superintendent, James Bicknell, city and county auditor, and D. L. Conking, city and county treasurer. The case has been set down for hearing during the November term, which begins next Monday morning.

NOT LIKELY TO NAME DIRECTOR FOR CARNIVAL

Directors of the Mid-Pacific Carnival Company, Ltd., will hold a meeting this afternoon in the carnival rooms on Fort street for a general business discussion. Rumors that a new director-general will be chosen in the place of Judge H. E. Cooper, resigned, were discredited by President J. F. C. Hagens just before the meeting this afternoon. "We have no names up as candidates," said Mr. Hagens, "and it is not likely that anything else will be done other than to discuss in general the plans of the carnival."

REGIMENTAL DRILL OF NATIONAL GUARD SET FOR NOVEMBER 28

Colonel Samuel I. Johnson, the adjutant-general, has set November 28 for the regimental drill, when all of the National Guard of Oahu will assemble at the armory for inspection by the adjutant-general and staff. Following the inspection, the troops will pass in review before Governor Pinkham.

Active preparations are being made at headquarters for the regimental review now, with the object of having all companies in the best shape and fully equipped.

Company L, formerly Company K, will be inspected tonight at the National Guard armory, and it up to standard will be formally mustered into service by Lieut. Whitener. Necessity for inspection of the old company—Company L—is due to the company having fallen below standard in the number of men. The company has now been recruited up to full strength. Company E, recently mustered in, had 45 men present for inspection, and was fully up to standard.

Bottle Consigned to Sea Brought Message Quickly

Casting bottles into the sea in the hope of finding them after many days is a favorite occupation of ocean-travelers. Hence, presumably, the fact that a Chinese boy down at Kabuku yesterday picked up on the beach a sealed bottle, opened it and found therein a message. Being of prudent mind, he sent the bottle and contents to Captain of Detectives McDuffie. Here is what the captain read:

"I picked up, write Dorothy G. Simmons, Honolulu, Territory of Hawaii, Care, S. E. Simmons, Sergeant 1st class, Hospital Corps, U. S. Army, U. S. Army Transport Sheridan, October 12, 1915, thrown overboard at sea 100 miles east of Honolulu."

GREAT NORTHERN WILL BOOK PATRONS THROUGH TO CHINA OR AUSTRALIA

That the Great Northern Pacific Steamship Company has made arrangements with other steamer lines to book passengers through to the Orient and Australia with stopovers at Honolulu, was the news reaching here today in mail advices coming in on the Tenyo Maru.

While in San Francisco, Cal Stone, general traffic manager of the Great Northern Pacific, in making formal announcement that the Hill liner Great Northern would be put on the Honolulu run commencing November 29, made the following statement about booking passengers through from here to Japan, China and Australia after they arrive in this port from the coast on the Great Northern:

"We have made traffic arrangements with the Toyo Kisen Kaisha, the Union Steamship Company and the China Mail Company and will be able to book passengers through to the Orient and Australia with connection at Honolulu."

ROUSED FROM SLEEP TO SIGN FOR WIRES ABOUT HAWAII DAY

Harry L. Strange became a real Hawaii booster while he was in attendance at the gas convention in San Francisco. Strange conducted a Hawaii Day at the Pineapple booth in the horticulture building, and three days before the big day he arranged with the Western Union to send a message to everyone of the delegates to the gas convention. The message read: "Don't forget three days hence—Hawaiian afternoon. Expect you to be there."

A number of these messages were sent early in the morning, and the delegate had to get out of bed to sign for them, and they noticed it. The next day another message was sent each member saying that but two days remained before the Hawaii Day. On the morning of the day Strange sent the last of the messages to the members early enough to wake them up, and when the time came for the Hawaii meeting few of the delegates were absent.

"It was one of the best advertising stunts for Hawaii that we have heard of," said a member of the association writing to the Promotion Committee here.

WILSON TO OPEN FIGHT FOR REAL DEFENSE SCHEME

dreadnoughts of the modern type and 22 battleships of the second and third line.

This nation has no battle cruisers, while Great Britain and Germany had, respectively 10 and eight at the outbreak of the war. The United States has built, building, and authorized, 67 submarines as compared with a British flotilla of 99 and a German flotilla of 45 at the outbreak of the war. It is estimated that $500,000,000 must be spent on the United States navy within the next six years to bring that branch of the national defense up to a safety footing. This amount is exclusive of the appropriations for the upkeep of the navy, and will be expended on the building program alone.

140,000 Men Top Army Figure.

For the present it is improbable that an attempt will be made to increase the regular army to more than 120,000 men. Eventually an army of 140,000 men may be obtained, but this is regarded as a top figure. Recruiting officers of the army are understood to believe that it will be practically impossible to obtain more than 140,000 men in this country who are willing to enter the army as a calling.

In connection with the administration's plan for building up a "continental army" of trained citizens, much is to depend upon the patriotism of the American people—and particularly the American employer. As explained below, volunteer citizens must forsake their regular occupations for two months in each year, for three years, to train for warfare.

An appeal is to be made to employers—corporations and business men of all classes—to furlough their employees who want to undergo this two months' training each year. The response to such an appeal is problematical.

"Citizen Reserve" is Basis. In connection with the partially disclosed plans of the administration for national defense, it is apparent today that a "citizen reserve" is the basis of the program for the army—the present expectation of the administration being to recruit these citizen-soldiers at the rate of 133,000 per year.

Each citizen reservist is to be given two months' training during each year, or six months within three years. After the expiration of the three-year period, the citizen will be mustered out, but will be subject to call to the colors for an additional three years.

Meanwhile, as each quota of 133,000 men flashes out its training, an additional quota of 133,000 will be enlisted to replace the former.

That there will be no large standing army is shown by the fact that Chairman Hays of the House Military Affairs Committee, has tentatively agreed to the administration's program. Mr. Hays' position for years has been that with an adequate navy and an isolated position this country does not need a large and expensive standing army.

Army increase of 32,000. The best figures obtainable indicate that the strength of the army, now about 88,000 men, will not be increased to more than 120,000.

Much of the increase to be carried in the next army appropriation bill will be for the pay of the men added to the army and the "citizen reserve." It is said authoritatively that although Chairman Hays is willing to support the administration's "reserve idea," he has frankly said that he fears the enlistments will not be as gratifying as expected by the secretary of war.

Secretary Garrison, it is learned, estimated the annual cost of the new reserve at $15,000,000. Mr. Hays believes it will approximate twice that amount, and will grow more expensive from year to year, as thousands of extra officers must be used to train the "citizen-soldiers."

So far as it has been worked out, the high spots of the administration's national defense program for the army—which is to have an appropriation next year of around $180,000,000—is as follows: Start Many Training Camps. The establishment of training camps to teach the rudiments of warfare to the 133,000 men expected annually to enlist with the reserve. Each citizen-soldier will receive six months' actual training during three years.

The addition to the aerial equipment of the army of at least 20 aeroplanes of the most modern type and the discarding of old machines as soon as they cease to be up to date. The purchase of armored motor vehicles, such as are now being used successfully in the European war. Large increases in the artillery branch of the service, now lamentably weak. This part of the appropriation will be unstinted, the exact amount allowed to depend largely upon the advice of experts now engaged in determining what is needed.

The laying in of vast supplies of reserve ammunition. A standing army whose strength will be a compromise between the figures of the "small army" advocates, who are opposed to any increase, and the "big army" forces, who desire an army of 200,000 to 300,000 men.

Practically all the increased appropriation is to be apportioned among four branches of the service, the artillery, the ammunition supply, the expense of the "citizen reserve" and the added upkeep of a bigger regular army.

cise his influence toward securing peace at this time. He was of the opinion that peace at this stage of the conflict would leave neither side satisfied.

Regarding the reports that Minister Ishii, the new Japanese minister of foreign affairs, had negotiated a new treaty between the two nations, Mr. Okazaki said there was no basis of truth in the rumors, and that Ishii would have been "crazy" had he attempted such a thing.

In London, Mr. Okazaki found that the German Zeppelin raids have invariably been only on that city, the Germans concentrating their attacks on the capital of Great Britain. He said the repeated raids have aroused Britons to an almost insane desire to "get out and kill more Germans," and that the recruiting offices have been jammed with men seeking to enlist.

Mr. Okazaki has been gone since last July, and made detailed investigations with both London and Paris as his headquarters. "I wanted to go on to Germany, but they wouldn't let me into that country," he said. "I was greatly disappointed."

Asked about the application of Ozawa, a local Japanese, for American citizenship, Mr. Okazaki said that if it is granted him the effect will be to make relations between Japan and the United States much more friendly than they now are. "It will mean a better understanding between both countries," he added.
