Gregory Is Hot After Stuart's Resignation

JUDGE TO BE LET OUT FIRST CHANCE DEPARTMENT GETS

Attacks on Lane and Gregory Stir Resentment and Later Takes Action
WOULD LOCATE LETTER FILED WITH PRESIDENT
Otherwise Impeachment Proceedings Might Be Proposed in House

(Special Star-Bulletin Cable)
WASHINGTON, D. C., July 12.—Attorney-general Gregory instituted an investigation this afternoon to locate the resignation of Circuit Judge T. B. Stuart of Honolulu, who has signified his intention of resigning.
Mr. Gregory has requested the president to transmit the letter that Judge Stuart filed with him, in which the attorney-general and Secretary of the Interior Lane were criticized, particularly upon the matter of appointments in Hawaii and on Secretary Lane's land policy.

The judge did not give to either Lane or Gregory a protest of the kind he filed with the president. His letter left with the president does not contain his resignation but a promise that it will be filed August 1.
Attorney-general Gregory is on the war-path. He says the resignation will be snapped up at the earliest opportunity. It is believed that otherwise he might have his friends in the house propose impeachment proceedings.

The National Guard reserve is another feature. It is subject to rules made by the president. None of these have yet reached Honolulu.

FREE PORT PLAN NOT ENCOURAGED BY HONOLULANS

Ad Club Hears Speakers at Weekly Luncheon; Wants More Information

What is a "free port?" Anyone who can answer this question will confer a favor upon the educational committee of the Ad Club, which started considerable discussion on this subject at the Ad Club luncheon at the Alexander Young hotel today.
A number of speakers were called upon to tell of free ports, and though Hamburg, Hongkong and Copenhagen were mentioned, not one of the speakers spoke in favor of a free port for Honolulu, or the benefits to be derived from the same.

Governor Lucius E. Pinkham, the first speaker, told of Hongkong as a free port being the great distributing center of China, and also told of the benefits of a free port to Copenhagen, but he stated that he could not see where Hawaii would benefit by having a free port in Honolulu.
Judge Sanford B. Dole said that the question of a free port for Honolulu had been brought up for the past 50 years, but no one had come out to give any definite explanation of where the plan would be of benefit to Hawaii. He stated that a free port district in some cities is a place for the storage of raw materials. He ended his discussion by stating that the constitution of the United States would have to be changed to make Honolulu a free port.
Edward L. Tindall told of the free port at Hongkong and said that it was favored by mariners and ship-owners as there was no charge made for goods, all supplies being free of duty, with the exception of opium.
Jared G. Smith told of a plan to form a free port on Long Island, where raw materials could be received free, and then manufactured for exporting to other countries. He said that inasmuch as Honolulu was not a center for distribution he could not see where a free port would be of benefit.

A. P. Taylor, who could not be in attendance, wrote a letter to the club which was read by President Wallace R. Farrington. Mr. Taylor said there is a misconception regarding the free port idea and in the limited sense meant by its supporters it deserves approval.
Fruit Needs Shipping Facilities
A. T. Longley, superintendent of the territorial marketing division, stated during his remarks in "Shipping" that Hawaii could fill two fruit ships a month to the coast if the bottoms could be secured. He stated that a number of ranchers are throwing away their provisions and that bananas are rotting and thrown away because there are no vessels here equipped to carry the product to the coast.
He stated that the small farmer should be encouraged to raise produce for Hawaii, and made the remark that if Hawaii was left alone for two months the ranchers

PIONEER WORKER FOR TELEPHONY TELLS OF GROWTH

T. A. Watson, Who Assisted Bell in Early Days Takes Vacation Here

The man who made Alexander Graham Bell, telephone inventor, famous, is in Honolulu. He is Thomas Augustus Watson and he came in the Manoa Tuesday night to visit in the islands for the first time. He expects to remain about a month and is staying at the Pleasanton Hotel.
Watson was in charge of the mechanical and technical end of professor Bell's theoretical experiments and heard the first message ever spoken over a telephone. It was particularly appropriate that about 40 years later, Watson and Bell, who had the first telephone conversation, should be the two to talk from New York to San Francisco a year ago last January.
Speaking of this remarkable long distance conversation, Watson told in the Star-Bulletin office this morning that it was easier to hear the message over the 4500-mile space traversed than it had been over the two-mile line 40 years ago.
"I was in San Francisco, Mr. Bell was in New York City, and Theodore N. Vail, the president, was on Jekyll Island off the coast of Georgia," said Watson. "The three of us heard everything perfectly. Mr. Vail 'cut in' and Mr. Bell and I did the talking. The total distance was about 4500 miles, but we were talking on a double circuit or 9000 miles of wires."
Watson's home is in Boston, where he has attended only to his personal affairs for the last few years, but for several years after his association with Bell he was an extensive ship builder and is well informed on the subjects of ship subsidies and merchant marines. He is a student of botany and geology.
"I don't believe the laws of Congress, whatever they may be, will ever make a great American merchant marine," said Watson in talking of shipping, "and about the only way the United States can ever become a great power commercially will be when internal economic conditions are the same as those of the foreign nations who are so successful with their shipping."
About 12 years ago Watson spent most of his time in Washington, he says, in an attempt to put the ship subsidy bill through Congress but it fell by the way. Watson says he lost every cent he put into the shipping business because that is one of the few ventures almost impossible under existing conditions in the United States.

CAMPAIGN ISSUE OF LANE'S LAND POLICY FORECAST

"Organization Democrats" Are Likely to Make Fight for More Homesteading

Secretary Lane's apparent policy of leasing public lands instead of homesteading them, and Governor Pinkham's observance of this policy, may be vigorously contested by the "reorganization Democrats" of Hawaii in the territorial campaign this fall.
Chairman M. C. Pacheco of the Democratic territorial central committee returned from the St. Louis national convention last evening on the Mauna with a long budget of interesting political and Washington news, together with some timely forecasts of the coming party fight in the islands.
With Pacheco were other members of the Hawaii delegation at St. Louis—National Committeeman John H. Wilson, Iola Kikahi and Jesse Uluhi, Oahu members of the delegation. L. L. McCandless came back several days in advance of the others, and Ollie Shipman of Hilo and Morris Keohokalole of Maui remained behind in San Francisco. The latter may go to Washington on business connected with a patent in which he is interested.
Circuit Judge T. B. Stuart of course was not expected back. He and his resignation have been much in the limelight of local discussion and Pacheco confirms the Star-Bulletin's information that the judge is so opposed to Governor Pinkham and to Secretary Lane and Attorney General Gregory in their conduct of Hawaiian business that he insists that his resignation be accepted.
The fight of the "organization Democrats" against Governor Pinkham is not likely to be carried into the fall campaign, says Pacheco, but he said it was both possible and logical that one of the governor's policies to which Stuart has objected most bitterly, that of leasing public lands, will be a sharply-fought issue.
"Personally I do not favor taking the fight on Mr. Pinkham into the campaign," Pacheco says. "We have made our fight and I am satisfied we have made an impression. But it is evident that the secretary backs up the governor strongly. I do not think the administration is as strong behind the governor as Mr. Lane is, and I do not believe that if Mr. Wilson is reelected Pinkham will have the ghost of a show of reappointment when his term expires. But you can't remove governors in a day. Outside administration circles there is much dissatisfaction."

(Associated Press Service by Federal Wireless)
WASHINGTON, D. C., July 12.—With stories coming from Poland of horrible suffering and privation, and with appeals to the United States for help, both from local Polish societies and from Poles and humanitarian workers abroad, President Wilson has pledged aid for the non-combatant war victims.
Representatives of Polish organizations called on him today to enlist his aid so that the blockade of food can be lifted and assistance sent to the hungry millions in Poland. The president told the representatives that he will make personal efforts to relieve the starvation situation. It is understood that he is considering a personal appeal to the rulers of the nations involved, Germany, Russia and Austria, to allow food distribution to the populace.
