DEATH SUMMONS A. S. HUMPHREYS AT EARLY HOUR

ceived in the public and private schools of Columbus, and he completed his schooling at Soule College, New Orleans.

Always gifted and a hard student, both in his boyhood and adult days, Judge Humphreys was admitted to the bar before he was 21 years old, taking the oath before the justices of the supreme court of Mississippi. He was the youngest man ever admitted to the bar in that state, and his examination received excellent comment from the justices of the high tribunal.

His knowledge of the law and of the best things in English literature gave promise at that time that he would become the successful attorney which he later made of himself. He practiced law in Columbus for about two years and, about the time he had attained his majority, moved to Prescott, Ariz., where he opened an office and resumed his practice.

Judge Humphreys made a distinct success of his legal work in Arizona. From there he moved to Honolulu, reaching this city 23 years ago.

His career in Hawaii was notable, but varied from stormy to exceedingly quiet periods, the latter including the last few years of his life when, largely on account of impaired health, he almost effaced himself from the public eye. In the transition period between annexation and the creation of territorial government, Judge Humphreys took an active part in organizing the Republican party here. He held a preliminary meeting, called to discuss the question of national parties, that if the Republican sympathizers did not act promptly "the other fellows" would get all the offices. At the first election the Home Rule party obtained control of the legislature, Republicans forming the opposition under a governor of their party.

Judge Humphreys, who had meantime become one of the first set of circuit judges appointed by President McKinley under the Organic Act, tried to control the dominant party during the memorable initial session of the territorial legislature, making his house the rendezvous of councils of leading Home Rulers, white and native. This course brought him severe public criticism, as it was considered improper on the part of a member of the judiciary. His controlling ownership in the Republican, a morning daily edited first by his brother-in-law, Arthur Johnstone, helped to get him further into hot water. Then came the famous Gear contempt of court case, which furnished Honolulu with one of its periodical but ephemeral sensations. For the publication of a cartoon reflecting upon the judicial chair of Judge Gear, a circuit court colleague of Humphreys, Walter G. Smith, editor of the Advertiser, was cited for contempt. Judge Humphreys and Gear, presiding together for the occasion, found Smith guilty and sentenced him to imprisonment until he purged himself of the offense. The sentence was put into effect, but the offending editor was released after a short sojourn in jail, well taken care of by Sheriff Henry, under a full pardon granted by Acting Governor H. E. Cooper.

Other episodes in which the lawyer figured with strategic and forensic ability were the disbarment proceedings against several attorneys for alleged looting of the Sumner estate, and the strike of Inter-Island Steam Navigation Company's captains and mates. The latter was the last occasion in which he was strongly in the limelight, but since then he has been a "counselor of counselors" in many important cases. As a judge, Humphreys was preeminently what the legal fraternity calls "quick," his conversance with the "books" and his memory being remarkable.

His intimates say of him that Judge Humphreys, after the events, made no warmer friends than the very persons whose feelings he had rasped in the heat of his professional share in various unpleasantnesses, such as those herein briefly mentioned.

Judge Humphreys is survived by a widow, a member of the well-known Along family; two daughters, Frances and Marie, and twin sons, Abram and Caldwell. Other surviving relatives include a half-brother, Col. William D. Humphreys, who was an officer in the Confederate army and now living in Columbus, Miss.; and a second half-brother, John W. Humphreys, also living in Columbus.

Letter Proves Wide Knowledge Of Hawaii Nei

Chicago Man Writes to "U. S. Consul, Honolulu"; Right Address is Ceylon

"Walter Leonard, U. S. Consul, Honolulu, Hawaiian Islands." This was the inscription on a letter which arrived Friday and was turned over by the postoffice to Eben S. Cushingham, chief clerk in the office of the Secretary of Hawaii.

Cushingham looked up Leonard's name in the Congressional directory of American consuls, and found that one Walter A. Leonard is American consul at Colombo, Ceylon. He re-addressed the missive, which is from H. R. Newlean, 1517 E. 67th St., Chicago, and was mailed in Omaha. It will reach Leonard in the course of human events.

"It's a typical specimen," commented Cushingham as he crossed out the original address. "People in Chicago don't seem to realize this is American soil. Governor Pinkham has 'Territory of Hawaii, U. S. A.' on his letterheads. He had to put 'U. S. A.' there because so many people kept sending letters here addressed to the U. S. consul."

WALL & DOUGHERTY.

Mark Twain once said:

"There comes a time in every rightly constructed person's life when he has a raging desire to go somewhere and dig for hidden treasure."

"While we are not a gold or diamond mine, some of our townspeople, in prospecting around, are discovering wonderful treasures amongst the things that are arriving weekly from the States.

"During his stay in New York our Mr. Wall had every opportunity afforded him to examine and purchase a most complete stock of gems mounted and unmounted, together with an exceptional line of Christmas Novelties of the Jeweler's Art, never before equalled in Hawaii.

Come in and see these Treasures
YOU WILL FIND JUST THE RIGHT THING, NO MATTER WHAT THE OCCASION MAY BE.
