Canning Season Closes.

On Wednesday of last week the Haiku Fruit & Packing Co. finished its first season's run, the output being about 2000 cases of canned pineapples and a large amount of pineapple jelly, and of which will be shipped on the next Nevada.

For several years past Mr. D. D. Baldwin has been raising fine crops of high grade pineapples at Haiku, and last year the Haiku Fruit & Packing Co. was organized to cultivate and can pine on a large scale in the Haiku District. A complete plant for manufacturing cans and canning pines was bought and put in operation at Haiku in July of this year, the average daily capacity of which is about 10,000 pines per day at present, but with easy facilities to increase the daily output as the supply of pines increases.

The Maui News, published at Wailuku, Hawaiian Islands, by Geo. B. Robertson, a Democratic light while in Siskiyou, now issues a supplemental Republican edition, which is edited by the Republican party of that section, and supports Roosevelt and Fairbanks. The paper, however, appears to be independent, so far as Robertson controls—Yreka, [Cal.] Journal.

This is rather a hard jolt from Brother Nixon, who for the past forty years has published a staunch republican journal at Yreka, but what is an old ex-confed to do? There is no democratic party on Maui, and the few democrats here have been swallowed by Billy White and the home rule party. The experience of Maui with the home-rule legislature and the home-rule county officials still gives one the cold sweats, when remembered and reviewed. The republican party, as it exists on Maui, stands for all that we most need, and the republican candidates are men on whom we can rely. With us down here it is not a question of national politics, but rather a struggle between enlightened advancement on the one hand and faction-led ignorance on the other. The News will vote straight republican this fall, and earnestly advises all its readers to follow its example.

It is creditable on the part of the government officials to desire to employ none but citizen labor on public works, and if the situation demanded such a course, no other would be excusable. But on Maui the conditions are averse to this course. Every Maui citizen who can or will work has no trouble in finding work, and prefers a steady job to desultory work on roads and other public improvements. Consequently on Maui, as well as on the other Islands when a contractor takes a job it is extremely difficult to secure citizens labor, and sometimes practically impossible to do so, as illustrated by the Wilson & Duggan contract on Maui. Such being the conditions, the government should realize that a new policy should be formulated which will allow the employment of the necessary alien labor so that the public interests will be properly served.

The visit of Governor Carter to Maui has been an extremely educational one not only to the Governor and other officials in his party, but also to the people of Maui, all of whom have had the fullest opportunity to meet and confer with the government officials as to the different needs of our Island. Much needed work will be pushed at once, and where appropriations have proved insufficient, the legislators from Maui will have less trouble in securing the money needed for proper improvements. One of the things most needed on Maui are more and better roads, and after his hard horse-back ride over our rough trails through lands which are only awaiting good roads to be developed into profitable farming areas, Governor Carter will doubtless recommend in his message to the next legislature such appropriations as may be needed.

The Russo-Japanese war in Manchuria is just now furnishing a lively guessing contest. True, the Japanese have been winners so far, both on land and sea, but their victories have cost them so dear in men and money that it is now becoming a question as to how long they can continue their victorious campaign before they exhaust their credit and resources. Had Port Arthur fallen a month ago, history would have been vastly different, and it does not seem sure that Port Arthur will be reduced shortly, if at all this year. The rigors of a semi-arctic winter will soon pervade the scene of war, and practically tie up operations till the approach of spring. If Japan does not capture Port Arthur and bag Kuropatkin shortly, things are liable to go hard with the little brown men.

Politics in Honolulu are becoming somewhat variegated. Cecil Brown's announcement that he will run independent, and the action of the democratic party in offering him a seat at their love feast by leaving a vacant place on their senatorial ticket are the first indications of an interesting mix-up. The Advertiser is lukewarm in its advocacy of some of the republican nominees. This is all wrong, from a party standpoint, and the truth is that the Islands cannot well stand the consequences of a republican defeat this fall, hence it is to be hoped that things will straighten out in the metropolis before election day.

The conservation of the waters of Maui by means of big ditches, eventually supplemented by big reservoirs and mountain tunnels will open thousands of acres of what is now arid land to cultivation, and much of what is now dry and rocky land will one day teem with luxuriant crop. The soil and climate of Maui is most peculiarly adapted to agriculture, and water is the one thing needed to make our dry and barren hillsides blossom like the rose.

There are thousands of acres of land between Ulupalakua and Huelo which are well adapted to the growth of pineapples and now that the Haiku Fruit & Packing Co. have demonstrated the success of this industry, those owning such lands should carefully investigate the matter, and interview the officers of the H. F. & P. Co. for the purpose of ascertaining upon what terms contracts could be obtained for the raising and selling of pineapples.

75 Kihel, $12.50. So reads a recent Honolulu stock sale report, and its reading will awake some sweet and some bitter recollections. Kihel was horribly overstocked when it was floated, and there were lots of suckers in Honolulu about that time, but the little plantation is pulling out all right, and with the big water ditch to draw from it should pay regular dividends after this year if sugar keeps up to a fair price.

This summer's run was comparatively short, as the large area of young pines planted by the Company will not mature before next year. There will be a winter's crop this year which will not be canned, as it is found more profitable to ship the raw pines to a winter market on the Coast. Next summer the canning season will be longer, and the output much larger. There is much available pineapple land adjacent to Haiku besides that controlled by the Company, and as they propose to make very liberal long term contracts, there is no doubt but that in a few years many land owners in the vicinity of the cannery will make contracts and furnish the cannery with an immense amount of pines, as is done at Eva, Pearl City and Wahiawa, Oahu.

The process of converting a raw pine into a canned one is a brief but interesting one. The two ends of the pine are cut off, and the fruit is applied to a species of turning lathe which removes the husk and outer impurities, leaving a plump, fat ball of pure pine. This is run through a cylinder for the purpose of reducing it to a proper size. The core is then punched out by a mechanical device which performs the operation neatly. The pine next passes through another cylinder whence it emerges sliced for the can. Those slices which are broken, or are too small are cut into small cubes or blocks and are also canned. The trimmings are the smaller pieces pass through a grater, and are also canned, so that there are three grades of exactly the same quality, differing only in size. The first are known as sliced pineapples, the second as pineapple tidbits and the third as grated pineapple. As fast as these cans are filled the top is rimmed on and they are plunged in hot water for the needed cooking process, at which stage all the cans which are not airtight are rejected. The cans are then treated to a laquering process to prevent rust, and are labeled according to their grades with the handsomely designed labels adopted by the Company. The labels are all marked "Royal Hawaiian", and contain the Hawaiian coat of arms and a handsomely pictured pineapple. Differently lettered labels are used to designate the grades and distinguish the sliced, grated and tidbit output.

In addition to the canned fruit, a large quantity of delicious pineapple jelly is turned out which will doubtless capture the Coast market. As the cannery is in the close vicinity of large guava forests, a large quantity of guava jelly of high grade is also being turned out. The Company will not use gelatine or any other foreign substance, in their jellies, and Mr. W. A. Baldwin, the manager, states that it is the intention of the Company to put up only a pure article, so that the word "Royal Hawaiian" on a can of pines or a glass of jelly will be a guarantee of its absolute purity. The people of Haiku are to be congratulated on the advent of this new industry, and other districts in the same belt will doubtless follow the example of Haiku.
