Unusually heavy seas at Kahului Tuesday evening washed away the cribs which support the pipe line of the dredger. The pipe sank to the bottom of the harbor and caused a delay in the operations there. The damage was due to the heavy ground swells that came in around the end of the breakwater. The swell did not affect the water in the harbor.

Dies from Poison.

What was evidently a case of poisoning occurred Tuesday morning and as a result a Japanese woman by the name of Toma lost her life. The woman lived with her two small children and supported them by cooking for a number of Japanese field laborers.

On the morning in question she prepared the breakfast and luncheon of the men and after they had gone took a dose of a white powder and was soon suffering intense agony.

Persons living in adjacent rooms entered her room and found her lying on the bed. They went for Yamashita an ex office boy of a local physician. Witnesses testified that Yamashita gave her medicine but she soon died.

A coroners inquest was held and while it was evident that the woman was poisoned there was no evidence as to where she got the medicine that probably caused her death nor from whom she got the same.

An autopsy was performed on the body by Dr. R. H. Diezgar who sent part of the organs to Honolulu to have a chemical analysis made.

The coroners jury met Tuesday and Wednesday and then adjourned to meet after the result of the analysis is known.
