Whales Follow Her Good Traveling Man Poker Hand

Sid Spitzer Having Trouble With Water Monster Which Met Him on Kauai.

Sid Spitzer, the Honolulu traveling man is in fear and trembling, and from the story which he tells it would appear that he has every right to be.

Whales, more whales and then still more whales. This is the trouble which Spitzer has found himself in.

The worst of the matter, however, is that this same whale, whom Spitzer recognizes on account of the fact that his eyes are exactly like gin bottles, has followed him in his travels and appeared as Spitzer was driving along the Hamakua Coast last Wednesday.

There's a young man in one of the big furniture exhibition buildings in Chicago who since a recent experience, never permits his temper to become ruffled while at the telephone.

A few days ago he could not get the number he called for as quickly as he desired.

"See here, central," he shouted, "I'll report you."

"You don't know who I am, was the calm reply.

"Well, I'll find out, and that blamed quick, too."

"I know you, though," came in a soft, sweet tone over the wire.

"You're in the big office furniture building. I've seen your picture."

Mrs. Bunsen Knew it Was a Good One and Played it to the Limit.

The Bunsens went over to spend the evening with the Goitts, because people get tired of staying at home all the time and just listening to each other's palaver.

Goitt suggested that they all sit around Mrs. Goitt's little sewing table and have a nice friendly game of poker for an hour or so.

It was only a penny ante five cent limit game, but then people have been known to clean up a first rate little bunch of pin money in even such a juvenile game as that, and Bunsen soon had his chips stacked up in four little cylinders in front of him.

By and by Bunsen took notice of the fact that Mrs. Bunsen was reaching over into his subtreasury vaults and picking up chips half a stack at a time and putting them into the pot as fast as she could meet Goitt's bets and raise him.

Bunsen looked at her when he saw his board of chips disappearing in a way that inquired plainly, "Are you sure you've got it on him?"

"Got a straight," whispered Mrs. Bunsen when she found opportunity to whisper without being observed.

Finally Goitt called her. "All I've got is three ladies," he said in a tone of polite inquiry, laying down his hand.

"Well, I have a straight," gurgled Mrs. Bunsen. "See—queen, king, ace, deuce, tray."

Bunsen shot her a glance that told her something was amiss before anybody had time to say a word.

"Why, the ace comes after the king, doesn't it?" she inquired. "And doesn't the two-spot come after the ace and the three-spot after the two-spot? I'd just like to know why that isn't a straight."

Bunsen watched Goitt rake in the pot and didn't say anything—not just then.—Chicago News.

The Duty of a Wife.

The family was divided upon only one subject—the revised version of the Bible. The husband preferred the new version and his wife the old. As a rule however, family prayers were read from the old version.
