

What The Soldier May Bring Home

Regulations on which even the Honolulu papers have published contradictory statements regarding just what articles of wearing apparel a discharged soldier may keep are printed this week by The Maui News through the courtesy of Frank B. Cameron. These were received by him direct from the War Department. This order rescinds all other orders received.

The circular states that the list gives articles of clothing and equipment which may be permanently retained by enlisted men upon discharge and the clothing may be worn by them thereafter. Following is the list as set forth in the circular:

1 overcoat (for all enlisted men who have had service overcoats) or 1 hat and 1 hat cord (for other enlisted men); 1 olive drab shirt; 1 woolen service coat and ornaments; 1 pair woolen breeches; 1 pair shoes; 1 pair canvas or spiral leggings (canvas if available); 1 waist belt; 1 slicker; 1 overcoat; 2 suits underwear; 4 pairs stockings; 1 pair gloves; 1 gas mask and helmet (for all officers and enlisted men to whom they were issued overseas); 1 set toilet articles, this includes 1 hair brush, 1 comb, 1 tooth brush, 1 shaving brush; 1 razor; 1 small steel mirror and 2 towels. (If in possession of soldier at time of discharge).

1 barrack bag; 3 scarlet chevrons, to be sewed on uniform prior to discharge when practicable.

The articles enumerated in paragraph 2 will be kept on hand by each enlisted man furloughed to the reserve since April 6, 1917, and will be retained by him upon his separation from active service and may be worn thereafter. When worn out these articles may be discarded.

The act of Congress approved February 28, 1919, provides that any person who served in the United States Army during the present war may wear the uniform after discharge provided that it shall include some distinctive mark to be prescribed by the Secretary of War. The red chevron has been prescribed to be worn by discharged enlisted men as a recognition of duties performed in the service of the country. This is now also designated as the distinctive mark required by the before-mentioned act and will be worn by discharged officers who accept commissions in the Officers' Reserve Corps, until called to active duty, when the red chevron will be removed. A chevron will be worn point up mid-way between the elbow and shoulder on the left sleeve of the coat and overcoat and on the shirt when worn without the coat.

It is unlawful under the National Defense Act for the uniform to be worn by discharged officers or enlisted men without their distinctive mark and the offenders renders himself liable to civil prosecution and punishment by a fine not exceed $500 or by imprisonment not exceeding six months or by both such fine and imprisonment. A supply of these chevrons will be kept on hand at all demobilization camps and at all quartermaster sales rooms for sale to honorable discharged officers.

Another Price Outrage No need to inquire what has become of the old-fashioned dime novel. It has gone to $1.50.—Anaconda Standard.

At The Theatres

"The Dub"

John Craig, the head of a small construction company, takes a stroll in the park. He is worried about several things, among them how to get eight hundred dollars that he may finish a job and also by the fact that he left a box of dynamite on his office desk. Suppose this box should fall to the floor. Where would his construction company be then? Then pop, went a paper bag between a boy's hands! It was only a little bang but John Craig had visions of his office sailing skyward. He started running and landed plump in the arms of Burley Haddon, an attorney without a conscience and not a very good judge of human nature either. Haddon took the panting youth as a dub and immediately saw in him the man he was looking for. In the home of George Markham lay an option on a mine that Haddon wanted to put up a bluff at trying to get Believing Craig a dub and believing also that he would be thrown out of the Markham home if he requested admittance, he promised him a thousand dollars and sent him forth. The thousand looked good to Craig and the job looked easy.

But beyond the doors of the Markham house lay adventure of which Craig never dreamed. To begin with, there was a very pretty girl, Enid Drayton, Haddon's ward, virtually kept a prisoner by the man and periodically swindled. Craig smelled a rat as soon as he entered and did not give up the job the way Haddon had confidently expected. In fact, he did not give up until he had proved that both Haddon and Markham were crooked and that Enid needed a new guardian in the person of a husband—John Craig.

"Jane Goes a Wooing"

Jane Neill is a fairly competent stenographer with a penchant for chewing gum and building castles in the air. As is so often the case with dreamers, she neglects to see that which is beautiful and lying right at her feet. Not that Micky Donovan, keeper of the "White House" lunch cart is exactly beautiful himself, but he does offer Jane a beautiful love. However, Jane puts him off. She seeks to improve her finances that she may the better provide for the twins she is obliged to care for. So she secures a position as stenographer to David Lyman, an eccentric old millionaire, a nervous wreck, who is bound to write the great American play before he passes on to other worlds. His ideas are taking shape in the form of a morality play and it is to transcribe his thoughts that Jane is hired.

She meets the old gentleman's heir, Monty Lyman, a young gad-about, much pursued by a society girl named Nita, who likes his prospects. Monty takes an immediate interest in Jane and she in him but before long Monty's pranks seriously offend the old gentleman and after making a new will he conveniently dies, leaving his fortune to Jane.

Jane doesn't exactly know what to do with it. It isn't hers, she thinks. But to see whether Monty will get to work she pretends that she is fully set on keeping it. And Monty doesn't make a success of working at all and ends up by proposing to Jane. And then all of a sudden Jane thinks of Micky Donovan and his real love for her. What a man he is compared to Monty! So she tears up her will and goes back to the "White House."

"Under The Top"

Jimmie Jones, who was born with a smile, is a house painter in the little town of Three Forks. When he was a boy and the circus came to town he fell in love with Pansy O'Neil, daughter of the owner of the circus, and years later when the show again makes the town, Jimmie renews the acquaintance and the romance. But there is villainy afoot. Pansy has inherited the circus at her father's death and her two rascally guardians, with foul play in mind, leave the little lady with Lotta Crust, a former performer of the ring, who lives in Three Forks. Lotta has a well formulated plot of her own, by which she plans to marry Pansy to her very flashy son Foxy, who he it known, is a gentleman of the light fingered fraternity.

Jimmie, however, enters a protest, which Pansy rather likes. However, the guardians, on learning of Lotta's plot, put in an appearance again. It is their plan to force her to marry one of them—either one, for all they care about is getting complete control of the circus. To put this plan through they hypnotize Pansy, but Jimmie again interferes. He secures the marriage license and plans to keep it until three o'clock in the afternoon, the time set for Pansy to come out of the trance. The guardians let out the cry of "Hey, Rube!"—the circus riot call—when they discover that Jimmie has gone off with the license, and as a result the canvasmen pursue the house painter all over the circus tents. He manages to evade them all by using the trapeze and the slack wires and at three o'clock he quits his antics and lets himself be captured. When Pansy learns of her guardians' plot she calls upon the hands to drive them out—and she, of course, is happy with Jimmie.—Adv.
