TO FRANCIS E. BROWNELL.

Noble Brownell, here is to thee! From a goblet foaming o'er, For a quicker brain, or braver, Never wrought a death before. Not for thee to pause and question Why thy Chief was laid so low; But with vengeance dead as lightning, Deal the ruffian blow for blow; Thine the form and thine the spirit, That the dead for Freedom slain, From the battlements of Glory Smile to see bestride the plain, When a horde of petty tyrants Loose the cruel dogs of war, Madly hoping, midst the carnage, Thus to rend the Stripes and Stars. We will love thee—God protect thee! Go ye to the field once more; Our's the wish, and thine the mission, Yet to redder with their gore Many a traitor's very heartstone, When they play the dastard foe— When they ape the base assassin— He who struck thy Chief slain low. Not on open field of battle, Where the brave exult to fight, Stand thy foemen, gallant Brownell; But like thieves they prowl the night, Sneaking 'midst ravines and bushes, See the trembling rebel crawl; Now he deals a murderous death-shot, And a patriot guardman falls! O, my soul grows sick within me, And my brain with fury burns; Yet another rebel turns, Whoso'er my vision turns, Every page is grim and gory— Hell has set her demous fire, And by the blood of our forefathers, By our love of liberty, We must hunt this damned rebellion Throat-deep to its curst bayonet, And a sniping and a halter, Swing the traitors who refuse. Blue-eyed Mercy, cold and solemn, Lifts her right arm, free and bare, And we see the fearful gleaming Of the sword of Justice there. Unheeded will be that blade eternal; Millions sink beneath its gleam, And their hearts' blood deeply crimson Every rill and mighty stream; Or our fame-embazoned banner Yet shall float o'er all the land, And the Northman and the Southron Proudly in its shadow stand. Noble Brownell, here is to thee! From a goblet foaming o'er, For a warmer heart, or braver, Never blest Columbia's shore. Washington June 8, 1861. KELLUM.

PARTICULARS OF THE PHILIPPI ROUT.

[Tribune's correspondence, June 7.] Our friend from Wheeling talked with an eye-witness of the Philippi rout. The Indiana column came within sight of the rebel encampment at 5 A. M. No picket guard gave alarm—none appeared to have been thrown out. The rebels were sleeping more soundly than usual, in consequence of the absorption, on the previous evening, of three or four barrels of whisky, seized on a neighboring farm. Their first warning of the column's approach was from a cannon ball, which carried away the tops of a line of tents. Officers and men, half dressed, tottered to their heels and horses. Had not the assailants been exhausted by a twenty-four hours' march, in a heavy rain, their pursuit would have been closer and more successful than was possible under the circumstances. In the tents, and along the roads, on which the fugitives ran, were found 1,400 pistols, upward of 500 stand of arms, a large quantity of hats, caps, uniform trousers, epaulettes, and carpet sacks, in one of which there were $300. The roll, which was also found, showed that the whole number of the rebels in camp was 1,940. Only fifteen were killed. The inhabitants of the town, who had been driven away by the traitors, soon flocked homeward, telling of their persecutions. Young women and children had been for two days in the woods. Farmers had been robbed of their produce, never receiving any pay. Two hundred sheep were taken from one. A forced loan of $25,000 had been demanded of the bank at Fairmount, and was to have been paid two hours after the payees fled. Men were frightened into the rebel service by assertions, that if caught by the Federal armies, their heads would lie upon the block. For their deliverers the people were ready to do everything. They refused to accept payment for milk and other produce, which they forced upon them. Everywhere the patriotic soldiers were welcomed. Everywhere the patriot Virginians were eager to join their ranks. The strongest feeling against Senator Mason prevails.

AMERICANS IN PARIS.—A meeting in Paris, held about the first instant, Colonel Fremont, Ministers Dayton, Clay, and Burlingame, were among the speakers. Mr. Dayton said, that since his arrival in Paris, he could detect no unfriendly feeling on the part of France to the United States, and certainly no French citizen would be found among the privateers being sent out by the seceders. He expressed the conviction that the rebellion would be put down. Cassius M. Clay spoke at some length. He was energetic in his comments on the conduct of England in the recognition of the Southern belligerent rights. He declared that if ever the flag of England became associated with the black flag of the South, that the star spangled banner of the United States and the tri-color of France would be seen against her, for France had not forgotten St. Helena. Anson Burlingame spoke on the same subject. Colonel Fremont was next called on, and was received with enthusiasm. He made quite a moderate speech. He regretted this political war, but felt confident that it would end in the triumph of truth and justice. He said he had been called back to America, and lost no time in responding, and he was ready to give his best services to his country.

Mr. Maynard, of Tennessee, made a bold Union speech in his district the other day. Whole ranks of secessionists fell before Maynard's rifle.—Lou. Jour.

A SOLDIER'S EMOTION IN BATTLE.

Our citizen soldiers inexperienced in the battle-field will find the most terrible moments just before the combat begins. A soldier in his narration of personal adventures in the Mexican war, published in "Howe's Achievements of Americans," gives some interesting items on this head in his description of the battle of Palo Alto, the opening battle of the war.

When all was ready, both armies stood still for about twenty minutes, each waiting for the other to begin the work of death, and during this time I did not see a single man of the enemy move; they stood like statues.

We remained quiet, with two exceptions. General Taylor, followed by his staff, rode from left to right at a slow pace, with his leg thrown over like a woman, and as he passed each regiment, he spoke words of encouragement. I know not what he said to the others, but when he came up to where we stood, he looked steadily at us, I suppose, to see what effect the novel circumstances in which we were placed had upon us; and, as he gazed, he said: "The bayonet, my hardy cockade! the bayonet is the thing!" The other occasion was that of Lieut. Blake, of the engineers, who volunteered to gallop along the enemy's line, in front of both armies, and count their guns; and so close did he go that he might have been shot a hundred times. One of the officers of the enemy, doubtless thinking he had some communication to make, rode out to meet him. Blake, however, paid no attention to him, but rode on, and then returned and reported to Taylor.

Thus stood those two belligerent armies, face to face. What were the feelings of those thousands! How many thoughts and fears were crowded into those few moments! Look at our men! A clammy sweat is settled all over faces slightly pale, not from cowardly fear, but from an awful sense of peril, combined with a determination not to flinch from duty. These are the moments in which true soldiers resign themselves to their fate, and console themselves with the reflection that whatever may befall them, they will act with honor; these are the moments when the absolute coward suffers more than death—when, if not certain he would be shot in his tracks, he would turn and flee. Fighting is very hard work; the man who has passed through a two hours' fight has lived through a great amount of mental and physical labor. At the end of a battle, I always found that I had perspired so profusely as to wet through all my thick woollen clothing, and when I had got cool, I was as sore as if I had been beaten all over with a club. When the battle commences, the feelings undergo a change. Reader, did you ever see your house on fire? If so, it was then you rushed into great danger; it was then you went over places, climbed over walls, lifted heavy loads, which you never could have done in your cooler moments; you have then experienced some of the excitement of a soldier in battle. I always knew my danger—that at any moment I was liable to be killed; yet such was my excitement that I never fully realized it. All men are not alike; some are cool; some are perfectly wild or crazy; others are so prostrated with fear that they are completely overcome; an awful sinking and relaxation of all their energies takes place, awful to behold; they tremble like an aspen, sink into ditches and covert places, cry like children, and are totally insensible to shame—dead to every emotion, but the overwhelming fear of instant death. We had a few, but a few, of such in our army.

As the two armies were facing each other, it was remarkable to see the coolness of our men; there they stood, chewing bits of biscuit, and talking about the Mexicans—some wondering if they would fight; others allowing that they would, and like demons, etc. I kept my eye on the artillery of the enemy, and happened to be looking toward their right wing, when suddenly a white curl of smoke sprang up there from one of their guns, and then I saw the dust fly some distance in front, where the ball struck. Instantly another, and then another rich curl of smoke arose, succeeded by a booming sound, and the shot came crashing toward us. The enemy fired very rapidly, and their balls knocked the dust about us in all directions—some went over our heads, others struck the ground in front and bounded away. Our batteries now went to work, and poured in upon them a perfect storm of iron; Lieutenant Churchill and his men began with their eighteen-pounders, and when the first was fired, it made such a loud report that our men gave a spontaneous shout, which seemed to inspire us with renewed confidence. I could hear every word the lieutenant said to his men. When the first shot was fired, he watched the ball, saying, "Too high, men; try another!"—"Too low, men; try again—the third time is the charm!" The third shot was fired, and I saw with my own eyes the dreadful effect of that and the following shots. "That's it, my boys!" shouted Churchill, jumping up about two feet; "you have them now! keep at that; and so they did, and every shot tore complete lanes through the enemy's lines; but they stood it manfully. The full chorus of battle now raged; twenty-three pieces of artillery belched forth their iron hail.

We were ordered to lie down in the grass to avoid the shot; this puzzled the enemy, and they could not bring their guns to bear upon us, making our loss very small. Many were the narrow escapes; one ball came within six inches of my left side. The force of the shot was tremendous; a horse's body was no obstacle at all; a man's leg was a mere pipe-stem. I watched the shot as it struck the roots of the grass, and it was astonishing how the dust flew. In about an hour the grass caught on fire, and the clouds of smoke shut out the opposing armies from view. We had not as yet lost a man from our regiment. In the obscurity, the enemy changed their line, and the eighteen-pounders, supported by our regiment, took a new position on a little rise of ground. As we moved on to the spot, a six-pound shot carried away the lower jaw of Captain Page, and then took off a man's head on the right, as clear as with a knife. The blood of poor Page was the first blood I saw; he was knocked down in the grass, and, as he endeavored to raise himself, he presented such a ghastly spectacle, that a sickly, fainting sensation came over me, and the memory of that night I shall carry with me to my dying day. A little later, Major Kingdold was mortally wounded at his battery; I saw him just after it. The shot had torn away a portion of the flesh of his thighs; his force was tremendous, cutting off both his pistols at the locks, and also the withers of his horse—a splendid steed, which was killed to relieve him of his misery. The enemy tried hard, but without avail, to hit our eighteen-pounders. The battle continued until night put an end to the scene. We bivouacked where we were, and laid on our arms; we slept, however, but little, thinking we might be attacked in our sleep.

The enemy had been very severely handled, owing to the superiority of our artillery. The gunners went into it more like butchers than military men; each stripped off his coat, rolled up his sleeves, and tied his suspenders around his waist; they all wore red flannel shirts, and, therefore, were in uniform. To see them limbering and unlimbering, firing a few shots, then dashing through the smoke, and then to fire again with lightning-like rapidity, partly hid from view by dense clouds of smoke and dust, with their dark-red shirts and naked arms, yelling at every shot they made, reminded me of a band of demons rather than men.

The Richmond papers state that Col. Porterfield, of the secession forces, was killed by the Federal forces at Philippi. The report needs confirmation.
