EARLY CLOSING.

What Was Said and Done at Yesterterday's Mass Meeting.

G. W. McKay, President of the Council of Federated Trades, called the meeting men of the parish assisted in the celebrato order and presided throughout. He tion of the mass. said the matter at issue was one in which all the retail clerks were specially interested. The Federated Trades would act with and aid them as far as possible. But the only way for the clerks to proceed, in order to win, was to organize. It was necessary that all classes of wageearners should organize and work together for their own good.

J. Hantsman next addressed the meetting, at the request of the Chairman. He also advised the clerks to effect an organization of their own, and elect delegates therefrom to co-operate with the Feder-ated Trades. All remembered the troubles that had from time to time arisen between labor and capital, and of the long and tedious battles that had been fought between these two great elements. But labor was going to win in every respect. The only way for the clerks to do was to form an organization and join the Federated Trades, and then the latter could help them. It should be a comparatively easy matter for them to carry paratively easy matter for them to carry their point, if they but go about it in the right way. Those present should come forward and sign the roll of membership for an organization, and then get others

The only thing to be done, Mr. Earl said, was for the visiting compilities to go about and endeavore. committee to go ahead and endeavor to persuade all the business houses to make similar concessions.

Mr. McKay again reminded the clerks -who were more directly interested in the matter than others-that they could not expect the Federated Trades to close the stores for them, but they were willing to do whatever was right to help the clerks along in their laudable undertak-

Rober Fisher was called on for remarks, and he addressed the meeting at some length on the benefits to be devised by employes from organization and mutual action. Our daily lives, he said, are made of sacrifices. Those who had to purchase home supplies often found it convenient to do their trading in the evening, but it was at the expense of the comfort of others. Therefore no reasonable person After would object to making such a slight sacrifice as was asked by the clerks of the stores, who stand as much in need of the proper amount of rest as any other class. He said the members of trades and other labor organizations were consistent in their advocacy of reasonable hours of employment, and stood ready to lend a heiping hand to the clerks, if the latter would organize in their own behalf. Chairman McKay again spoke briefly, suggesting that the clerks present effect at least a temporary organization. He referred to the difficulty that arose nearly a year ago between some of the San Francisco foundry proprietors and the molders in their employ, and asked where would the latter be to-day had it the country, which had stood by them yesterday. from the first. But for this help, he said, "The new chants would grant their request. Speaking for himself, he was free to say that the money he earned belonged to himself, and that he had the right to spend it just where he pleased. But not a dollar of it should ever knowingly be passed over the counter of any storekeeper who had not the proper feeling for his em-ployes, and no other man who had to work for his living should patronize such a man. That might be called "boycotting," or anything else, it mattered not he would deal only with those employers who treated their employes properly.

G. H. Jost spoke of the reforms that had been brought about in the interest of labor through organization. Forty years ago his father worked twelve hours a day, but now he (the speaker) had only to work nine hours. He knew of no reason why the clerks should work so many hours longer than other people. Ten hours should be sufficient for people to do all their trading. Headvised the clerks to organize for their own protection. In conclusion, he moved that a roll be opened for membership, and advised the cierks present to sign it and perfect a pre-

He said that before the present move-ment had been started he had caused the proprietors of several stores engaged in the same line of business as his to be o'clock, and several appeared to be willing to do so. The firm of which he was a member felt an interest in the welfare and comfort of their clerks, as well as those of other houses, and were ready to join in the proposed movement. He thought, however, that it would be better for the clerks in the drygoods stores and for the clerks in the drygoods stores and the cast.

Men Who Sympathize With the Overworked Clerks—An Organization Formed.

The ceremony of the Pontifical high mass was made more than usually interesting by the singing of the special choir. Weber's mass in G, consisting of the "Kyrie Elieson," "Gloria," "Sanctus" and "Agnus Dei," was rendered by Mrs. Coppersmith (soprano), Mrs. Frank Snook and Miss Madge Hassett (contraltos), Mr. J. G. SOMETHING NEW.

A Pastor Surprises and Delights the Members of His Congregation. The congregation of the Westminster

Presbyterian Church were treated to a surprise at yesterday morning's service, and a most pleasing one it was. It seems that the new pastor of the church, Rev. R. M. Stephenson, is not gutter, and during the splashing about in only an able and entertaining pulpit the mud, the pistol was discharged.

A temporary truce was called while all orator, but also possesses the rare qualification of being an excellent vocalist. Just before the regular services were begun he surprised his hearers by singing "Ninety-and-Nine" in a manner that was a revelation to them. from the first. But for this help, he said, the molders would have starved to death, and ere this been buried at the expense of the public. But they were still in the fight, for they had substantial aid from all the labor organizations of the country.

School Director C. M. Harrison being present, he was called upon, and addressed some very spirited remarks to the audience. He said he had always been an advocate of organized labor. If the clerks would follow the advice that had been given them, he was sure the merchants would grant their request. Speaking for himself, he was free to say that the money he carned belonged to himself and they had substantial aid from all the labor organizations of the country.

"The newspapers," he said, "did not tell the story as bad as it was. I happen to know some of the particulars. Harris was disappointed at not getting the position he was after, and was envious of Coffey. He persuaded Green to help him, and together they laid in wait for Coffey. Whed the latter put in an appearance they pounced upon him. Controller Colgan witnessed the affair and will testify against Harris and Green. He tried to pull Harris away from Coffey, but Green stepped up to him and told him if he interfered he'd get some, too, and Mr. Colgan concluded 'not to interfere.'"

PREACHED FROM THE PULPIT.

The éarly-closing movement was made the subject of a sermon by Rev. J. B. Silcox. The church was crowded, and the large congregation listened with deep interest to the reverend gentieman's eloquent and earnest appeal for justice and humanity on behalf of the overworked clerks in establishments that keep open until late hours at night. He urged his lady hearers to interest themselves in the matter, and to set an example for others to follow, by doing no shopping after 6 o'clock in the evening.

The corner of Twelfth and P streets was the scene of a lively scrimmage last even-

There is a grocery store on that corner with a saloon attachment. In the saloon are several private card-rooms, and in one of these card-rooms a quiet game of whist was in progress with four players. Bart Roach, accompanied by a "jag" dropped in on the scene and both sat down to watch the game.

The "jag" prompted Bart to offer some suggestions to the players. Bart started in by insinuating that the dealer was butter-fingered and was an good-natured, though, and retaliated mildly by hinting that he was hard-fisted.

Bart next complimented the man who sat at the opposite side of the table by telling him that he didn't know a trump from a wheel-barrow. The complimented individual went into eestacies-to such an extent that

Bart believed that he had been insulted. He went home, and securing a revolver, started back for the grocery. The saloon door was locked, and when he presented himself at the grocery entrance he was denied admittance. He met with a vigorous opposition, and as a result was landed out on the sidewalk again. Then he whipped ont his revolver.
