THE VISIT OF THE PRESIDENT.

The President of the United States is coming to the coast, and will for a few days be the guest of the people.

Americans are not man worshippers; their desire to meet the President is not in any respect a manifestation of fawning, but is a praiseworthy and altogether commendable ambition to do respectful honor to a position that is representative of the culmination of all possible dignity and honor in a Government by the people.

No matter, therefore, who should fill the office, his visitation to a distant portion of the country would be an event of reasonable importance, and excite an interest at once commendable and patriotic.

Nor is it mere curiosity that puts an edge upon desire in this matter. All intelligent American citizens know that in General Harrison they will see a plain, unostentatious, representative American; a man of practical views, clean life and unalloyed patriotism.

Just such men they have all seen and with their careers they are familiar. But when one of these eminently representative Americans is chosen to the chief magistracy, he is invested by the people with a new interest, because of the executive power he exercises, and the weighty responsibility he bears, which makes his views and his advice of greater moment, since the obligations of the office remove him in a great measure from the lesser considerations that influence men not invested with such great trusts.

The tribute the people pay to one who is thus situated among them is testimony for the American system of self-government; it is expression by the people of the confidence they repose in the system, and the faith they have in the doctrine that the office of the governor can thrive only in the consent of the governed.

Prior to General Harrison setting out upon this Western trip but two Presidents had visited the Pacific Coast, one, General Grant, shortly after his term of office; the other, President Hayes, during his incumbency. Both came as does President Harrison, as the guest of the people and not at the invitation of any one or group of citizens.

President Harrison has been invited by California representatives, by commercial men and agricultural delegates, by cities and towns, and by nearly every Californian and Oregonian who has called upon him in Washington, to visit this coast. He has repeatedly expressed a desire to accept these many invitations, and he now does so of his own motion and comes in the fullest sense as the guest of the people of the Pacific Coast, and not as that of any one or of any place. He will be received as such by all the people and be shown all the honorable distinction and courtesy that a grateful host could bestow upon a long-expected and much desired guest.

Just how much of selfish interest enters into his reception it is difficult to say. The metropolitan press insists that the visit of the President and two of his Cabinet will be of great value to the State, as it will give them practical knowledge of the country. In a sense that is true, but we do not attach to it the importance some of our contemporaries are disposed to do.

In a flying trip through the country these distinguished citizens cannot form definite opinions that will greatly influence them in passing upon national measures and policies immediately affecting the Pacific Coast. When their departments are considering matters of Pacific interest, they will rely, as heretofore, upon records made for each case and the facts as laid before them at the time. Nevertheless a run through the State, though the best part of it we fear--Northern California--is to be traversed in the night, will serve to broaden the views of our visitors concerning this fruitful portion of the domain of the nation.

We may hope also that the days to be spent in and around the bay of San Francisco will very much impress them with the importance of providing for the defense of that port.

It would be very profitable to the State to have these visitors with us in the fruiting and harvest season, when the lap of California overflows with the bounties of orchards, vineyards and fields; it would be especially gratifying if they could spend a week or two leisurely in traveling through the producing sections. But this may not be, and cities and towns in a round of receptions are to consume the time of the Presidential party, somewhat we apprehend to its discomfort. But whatever of selfish interest attaches to these receptions and honors done, is commendable and is above criticism. A people who do not take pride in their homes, who do not do themselves honor in pointing out to inquiring guests the benefactions with which nature has blessed their land, and who do not frankly express their hopes for the future of their State, are devoid of ordinary feeling; they lack in essential elements of patriotism--attachment to the soil and local pride.

The President and his party expect to learn something by their visit; they expect to enlarge their practical knowledge; to form some estimate of the communities they visit; to hear of needs and of suggestions for meeting them. They come perfectly well understanding that we have an intense desire to advance California in the rank of States, and to put ourselves just as nearly abreast of the foremost as may be. The President is not likely to be bored, therefore, even if by receptions we weary him physically; he comes to see and to hear, and he will not believe our welcoming the less cordial, that we seek to impress him with the importance of the State and its great capacity. Nevertheless the thing should not be overdone, and there is some fear that it may be by the over officious. The Presidential party will find texts in plenty for inquiry, and the natural suggestion of the hour and the moment will be the sufficient vehicle for conveyance of information.

Let us receive and honor the President of the nation with becoming dignity and all sincerity, without fulsome praise or obsequious bending. He is not one of those who are touched by flattery, or pleased with adulation. He comes among us as our chief magistrate, the chosen representative of the people to whom he is accountable, and from whom he derives all honor and distinction that attach to his high office. As such, let us receive him cordially, warmly, but with the bearing becoming in a self-governing people.

INJUSTICE IN JUDGING SCHOOL BOOKS.

In all the assaults that have been made upon the series of State school books, the idea has been industriously propagated, by the enemies of the system, that the work of the books were faulty. The implication was that if we used books issued by the book rings we would have flawless works. It is scarcely necessary to revive the memory of adults to what was the truth under the old conditions. There was constant fault found with the books of private firms. One set that was "in" was always under the fire of a rival publication that was "out," and the agents of the latter were so marvelously expert in exposing the weakness of the books that were "in" that the wonder always was why such defective books were ever put into the department.

Now, what we wish just at this time to call attention to is the fact that the State text-books have been less assailed than any others that have ever been used in the State. As a fact, the State books as a whole stand the test of criticism better than any series of their predecessors. At a meeting of the teachers of high eighth grades in San Francisco schools, held on the 13th inst., the State Speller was discussed, and it was found that the classes are all progressing with its use remarkably well. So the speller was approved. When it came to discuss drawing, the books and copies were condemned; indeed, one Vice-Principal advocated the use of the books as mere blank books, so defective are they. These drawing books and cards are not furnished by the State, but by one of the book rings.

So the fact developed that because a text-book is a State issue it is not necessarily bad; and because it is a book ring issue it is not necessarily good or without defects. Those who still grumble at the State series should reflect that defects are not peculiar to any system of text-books. That is to say, because some defects are found in some of the State text-books is no reason for wholesale condemnation of the system, any more than to say that other books are defective, therefore all of private publication are worthless, or that the system of private publication is incapable of giving us good books.

ITALY proposes to send, at Government expense, certain of her subjects to the United States, who are witnesses in proceedings against conspirators and assassins. In other words, Italy is incapable, by her own confession, of protecting her own people. But shipping off witnesses, upon whose lives a price is set, to the United States, will be equivalent to official introduction of the vendetta. Every one of these witnesses will be assassinated; the secret stiletto or the blunderbuss will do for them, even if they come to this country. Italy's proposition, therefore, to shift responsibility and send us trouble, may well be taken notice of by the Federal Government and an explanation asked. Certainly the Government of the King will find it more difficult to explain Italian inability to protect Italians than Mr. Blaine found the New Orleans case. The proposition of Italy is an excellent one for the entry of a protest by the United States Government.

A DISPATCH from Rome says that "the vendetta is inevitable," and all concerned in the New Orleans riot will die by violence within two or three years. If that is the sober judgment of the people in authority in Rome, there will be such a state of affairs in New Orleans presently as will involve the whole nation, and may result in the driving out of all alien Italians. However deplorable this may be, the liability of such an event will be imminent, if it is once clearly understood that it is the intention to ply the stiletto in revenge for the killing of the prisoners.
