RECEIVING THE PRESIDENT. Thus far the details for receiving the President to-morrow have well progressed, and the arrangements have been made with good judgment.

But unless it has been privately arranged, since no public announcement of it is made, there is likely to be a grave omission. That is, there appears to be no allotted time to drive the party through the residence section. The San Jose Committee made that a feature of their reception.

We protest that the people of Sacramento want these visitors to go away with a different idea of the city than they can possibly gain by a drive up J street to Seventh, to M, and thence to the Capitol. Let us see. The President is a prompt man. All along his route he has been "on hand" to the minute. When he has said "Move at 8 o'clock," he was ready at 7:55, and moved at 8, not five minutes after. If it takes half an hour to reach the Capitol, which it should not, and three-quarters of an hour are consumed by the review there ought to be half an hour given to a drive, say, up N street, to Eighteenth, to H, and in the section down to Tenth, and thence back to the depot.

If the wishes of the people could be expressed by vote, nine out of ten would say that they prefer to have President Harrison and his party see Sacramento's beautiful homes to having him remain at the Capitol the whole time he is here. The residence section of our city is what we have reason to be proud of; it is due to our guest to show him the best; if his wish is consulted, he will be greatly more pleased to look upon the homes of Sacramento than to pose before the multitude the whole two hours he is here.

We might just as well recognize the truth, of which every tourist tells us who comes here, and which all those who write of us put into their books: "The residence section of Sacramento is lovely; a delight to eye and judgment and taste; the business section is a sad contrast, disappointing, and gives visitors a most unfavorable impression of the city and the people."

THE REVOLT OF THE GRENADEER GUARDS. The New York Tribune thinks it ought not to occasion surprise that for the second time a revolt has occurred in the Third Battalion of the Grenadier Guards in London, when it is recalled that the guardian of that class below the rank of a commissioned officer occupies a servile position, and that his uniform is a badge of menial servitude. But, assuming the Tribune's premises to be correct, that to us seems the very best of reasons for surprise. Rebels do not spring from the slums, as a rule. It requires men of some mettle and individuality to revolt. But is not the Tribune mistaken as to the Grenadier Guards? They constitute the flower of the army, as we understand it; are picked men in stature and character, and are not recruited from the slums. There are, however, English soldiers who are of a class to which our contemporary's remarks will apply.

The soldier of the grade referred to, and of which there are many regiments in the English army, cannot, as the Tribune says, ride in a first-class railway carriage; he is kept out of the boxes and orchestra, parquet and general sittings of the theaters and relegated to the loftiest galleries. He is forbidden first-class restaurants and hotels and reading rooms. In short the red coat without epaulettes in England in some regiments is well nigh a badge of disgrace, and whenever the soldier can lay aside his uniform and pose a few hours in civilian garb he considers it a great event and the attainment of a lofty desire. One reason for this is that the privates are recruited from the lowest social levels in such commands, and consequently the officers and the people despise them, treating them much as we do the ex-convict and the output of the Barbary Coasts of our cities.

There is nothing done after the man enters the corps to lift him up and encourage his manliness, or inspire self-respect and laudable ambition. It is not to be wondered at that officers drill such men with severity and treat them very much as they would ragmuffins. To rise from the ranks is out of the question, so that the officer has no fear that he will ever be called upon to recognize the private as a social equal. The private knows that his chance of bettering his condition lies only outside of the service and hence he fears, but does not respect his officer. These conditions more strictly apply to the Brigade of Guards and the Riflemen. The Highlanders, Queen's Guards, etc., are to be wholly excluded from the criticism, while most of the Irish troops are independent and command a degree of respect.

Compared with the French and American soldiers, and especially with the German, the British soldier classes referred to are in disgrace. That any group of them should drum up sufficient spirit to protest against cruel drill and too severe discipline would be really surprising. Not less astonishing, however, is the policy of England regarding her enlistments. So careful in the selection of blue jackets, it is unexplainable why she should fill any of her red coat uniforms from the dregs of society and the back streets of the great cities.

DEATH OF PROFESSOR LE CONTE. By the death of Professor John Le Conte, of the Faculty of the State University, that institution has lost one of its oldest friends and brightest lights, and education and science have been deprived of a foremost man and a master mind. He had reached an advanced age, it is true, but so clear were his mental faculties, so vigorous his intellectual powers, that it had been believed he was good for a decade more of service to the cause of higher education.

He came from a line of French Huguenots on his father's side, and from Puritans on his mother's. His father was a scientist before him, and attained some eminence as a naturalist. Professor Le Conte was graduated from the University of Georgia with high honors in 1838. He then took up the study of medicine, and won his degree in 1841 from the College of Physicians and Surgeons, New York. He began practice in Savannah, but in 1846 accepted the chair of Natural Philosophy in Franklin College. This position he held up to 1855, when he accepted the position of lecturer on chemistry in the College of Physicians and Surgeons of New York, his medical alma mater. In a year thereafter he was called to the higher chair of Natural and Mechanical Philosophy at Columbia, S. C., and that position he occupied for ten years, when he was advanced to the chair of Natural and Mechanical Philosophy and Astronomy.

In 1869 he came to the University of California to fill the chair of Physics and Industrial Mechanics. He was then with the university in its infancy, and one of its organizers, and he lived to see it grow to its present splendid proportions, which to him must have been a source of infinite pride. He was the first President of the University after a Board of Regents was created, and the State assumed control. He held the office but a year, not accepting it as a permanent one. Six years later he again consented to serve as acting President for a time, and in 1876 he was elected full President, but resigned soon after, preferring his position as one of the teaching Faculty.

He was a many-sided man, and his contributions to literature, science and to human knowledge generally, together with his splendid service of twenty-one years and more in the university, constitute an imperishable monument to his genius, and his devotion to the cause of education.

The Eighteenth National Conference of Charities and Correction is to be held at Indianapolis the second week in May. It is very much to be regretted that California cannot be officially represented at that important gathering. The late Legislature declined to create a charities and correction board for this State, though nearly all the other States employ such an agency as an economic means. If we had at the Indianapolis conference an official representative, he would return well informed concerning the operations of similar boards, and be prepared to advise this State to its gain. The bill that died on the calendar of our Legislature was a very modest one. It did not go one-half as deep into the "business" of charity-dispensation inquisition as is authorized in most of the States. The chief opposition to the measure came from the church. It does not wish to submit the methods of institutional economy under it to official inspection, nor to have the charities it supervises, and for which the State foots about half the bill for maintenance, inquired into. That very fact ought to have prompted the Legislature to pass the bill, it being evidence that such a board as was proposed is needed. Outside of inquiry and report, however, the board would have been active in ascertaining just what crime costs the State, where the leakage is, if any, in disposition of charity funds supplied by the State; whether we are giving too much or too little, and whether the distribution of aid is fair between the charity institutions. We should have something practical from such a board concerning prison labor, outdoor relief and its relation to political corruption, the creation and heredity of pauperism; the child problem in cities; the custodial care of adult idiots; penal and reformatory institutions, etc. But a good deal can be done in the direction of educating public sentiment for a second attempt to establish a State board if the press will publish the better debates and papers before the National Conference. Two of the leading papers of Indianapolis are to print the reports made, papers read, and the debates had, very nearly in full, and extracts from these upon the economical questions to be considered will go far towards properly molding public thought in California, so that the next Legislature will be likely to pass the desired bill in response to public demand.

These dispatches say Mr. Blair has been called to Washington because China refuses to receive him as Minister from the United States. China has the right to so refuse, and it is not deemed offensive action where the reasons are personal. But it is said the objections to Mr. Blair are his pronounced friendliness to the Chinese exclusion policy. If so, then no man in harmony with the Administration can be named to whom China might not with as good reason object. The truth is, in the Senate Mr. Blair protested against the Scott bill because time sufficient had not been given in which to hear from the Chinese Government concerning the then pending treaty. He was indeed championing the right and ought to have kindly consideration from China for the courage he displayed in favor of fair play.

Let the people turn out to-morrow by the ten thousands and welcome the President. Welcome him as a worthy man in whom the people have reposed implicit confidence, but more heartily and joyously because he represents a principle. As the custodian of an office than which there is none loftier, he is the representative of the triumph of republican institutions; of the capacity of the people for self-government. He comes as the representative of the progressive spirit of the age, in which individuality is given fullest opportunity and honorable ambition and worthy aspiration have a free field, regardless of birth, the accident of fortune or the volume of wealth. The President is not the President of party but of the whole people, the Chief Magistrate over sixty-three million free men, women and children; the head of an indissoluble union of Sovereign States. As such he should be hailed joyously in the Capital City of California, with a heartiness that will never be lost to memory and that will testify to the sincerity of our love for the institutions that make such an office as he fills, possible.

The New York papers speak of citizens of Chicago as Chicagoese. This is nauseating. It would be on a par with Sacramentoese or San Franciscoese.
