CRITICISM OF THE JURY SYSTEM.

The American Bar Association recently assembled at Boston. It was a convocation of brilliant and learned men. The thing they did that is of most importance, and worthy most attention, was to sharply criticize the jury system in civil proceedings.

It is notorious that nowadays no jury is impeached, or at least very seldom, upon which there is not a majority of stupid or stubborn men; men either careless of their oath, or so inflated with brief authority that they are led to defy the courts and ride rough-shod over the law and the facts; or they are so lacking in mental attributes as to be unequal to the task imposed upon them.

One of the speakers in the lawyers' convocation, Mr. Alfred Russell of Detroit, did not hesitate to declare that trial by jury in civil cases is so uncertain, so much the cause of delay, that it forces settlement out of court to avoid the oppression incident to "ignorant and pith-penny determinations."

The Committee on Remedial Procedure reported strongly in favor of verdicts by three-fourths of a jury in civil cases, and Mr. Lancaster made bold to say that the business world is already demanding the abolition of juries in civil cases.

If, with this advance, the juries can be lifted to the level of capacity for jury, we may hope for an era in which obstruction of justice will disappear.

Judge Barrett long ago hinted that so-called miscarriages of justice are not infrequently the result of the law, and he scrupled not to add that weakness of judicial rule is the most frequent source of error in litigation.

We are disposed to think that there is not any general condemnation by the people of the jury system; they understand that it is in the make up of the panels where the greatest weakness resides.

We note that some of the pronounced Republican papers insist that the silver question is an issue in present and must be in approaching party contentions.

These outcries come, says the New York Sun, in most part from men who have had little practical experience in jury trials, a fact that being now called to our notice, we are satisfied is correctly stated by the Sun.

A Paris Alderman, or member of the Municipal Council, quarreled with a colleague, upon whom he eventually bestowed a box on the ear. When seconds were sent to him his representatives declared that a duel was out of the question, inasmuch as their principal was blind of an eye.

from jury duty might well be reduced, and even the period of service shortened, but the system of trial by jury is an integral part of the civilization of the age and must remain.

A LONG STRIDE IN ADVANCE.

In the International Congress of Hygiene and Demography, held in London in August, there was an interesting debate upon methods of disposing of the dead. One party, led by Mr. Seymour Haden, contended for the earth-to-earth system of burial; that is, interment without any intervening coffin and box, or other material to check decomposition and the action of the earth in taking up the matter of the body.

Another section of this distinguished body of learned men, led by Sir Henry Thompson, an eminent scientist and physician, contended for cremation as against either desiccation or drying, buried, as at present, or the earth-to-earth system. Sir Henry contended, and was ably supported by other eminent physicians, that burial in any form is dangerous to the living, and especially so where death is the result of zymotic disease.

The result of the debate was the adoption by this large body of scientists from all parts of the civilized world of resolutions to which there were but few dissentients, that the Governments of the world be urged to remove all legislative obstacles to cremation of human bodies. That such Governments be urged to adopt cremation of bodies on the battle field.

The passage of these resolutions constitutes a new, distinctly advanced position for the cause of cremation. It will have a tendency to command for it greater respect and to give it before State, national and municipal authorities higher standing. The world certainly is progressing. Twenty-five years ago no body of physicians on earth would have dared confront the intolerance of opinion to cremation.

ROBERT GIFFEN is an eminent statistician and student of finance, as well as a political economist of distinction. His are of the best brains of the famous British Board of Trade, at the head of the most important department of which he stands. He has never been a sensationist, or a prophet of evil for the sake of exciting the fears of the people, but, on the contrary, he is a man of deliberation, thought and slow movement, and of great caution of expression.

Mr. Giffen fears it is well to take heed. What Mr. Giffen fears is that while gold now flows from Europe to the United States, a check will be applied by a raise of the rates of discount by the Bank of England and the Bank of France. The result will be to send in along with European exports to pay for the supplies Europe needs from us. This result will bring on the crash, and it will be due to our overloaded currency condition, for he deems the issue of $600,000,000 of silver certificates annually a colossal mistake.

The decisive triumph of the Junta's forces over the Government troops in the battle before Valparaiso is now attributed to the use of smokeless powder by the insurgents and the superiority of their guns. It is said that as to numbers the forces were quite evenly matched, but the penetrating character of the bullets thrown by the smokeless powder was such that to be hit by one meant certain death. This fact the Government troops soon learned and a panic ensued that their officers could not stay.

We note that some of the pronounced Republican papers insist that the silver question is an issue in present and must be in approaching party contentions. But how can it be an issue now when all parties are disrupted in opinion upon that question? Neither of the two great parties is at peace with itself upon the silver question, it cannot therefore be a present party issue and all attempts to whip into the traces upon the idea that it is silly.

A Paris Alderman, or member of the Municipal Council, quarreled with a colleague, upon whom he eventually bestowed a box on the ear. When seconds were sent to him his representatives declared that a duel was out of the question, inasmuch as their principal was blind of an eye. The other Alderman agreed that this would be an insupportable disadvantage, and therefore did not insist on reparations by arms.

JIM FAIR IN '59.

Reminiscence of the Bonanza Mine Owner.

How He Made the Strike that Started Him on the Road to Fortune—The Loan of Twenty Dollars—Water Wouldn't Run Up Hill.

"So they say that Jim Fair got something to do with the electric street railway that's to be built here, eh?" remarked J. M. Baxter to a friend, as the two stood talking at the foot of the Mill office stairs this noon.

"Well, I knew Jim Fair when I would not trust him for a plug of tobacco," "Yes."

"Yes, siree. He jumped his board-bill on me, and it was six months before I got the spoolies. I was keeping a hotel up in Columbia about the year '59 and Fair was my boarder for three weeks. Board was $4 a day in those days, and Jim Fair was so dead broke he couldn't settle. One day he got into a fight over at Table Mountain and had the biggest sort of a head put on him. He came back to Columbia full of whisky, and popped up to the bar with his face and bosom all covered with blood.

"Baxter," says he, stepping up, 'lend me $20, will you?' "I haven't got a twenty?" I said. "Yes." "Not if I know myself."

"Because you owe me for three weeks' board already, and you don't get no more trust here. Why don't you put on an clean shirt and wash that blood off?" "I haven't got any other shirt, Mr. Baxter," he said, "except one that's over at Sonora."

"Well," said I, "go and see my wife and she'll give you one." "He went and washed the blood off his face and put on one of my shirts. Then he gave his gold watch and chain, which was then worth about $50, to my wife as security for his board bill, and he went to go to work. He found that the corporation's surveyor had run the survey on the contrary grade—that is to say, when the canal was finished, according to the survey the water would have to run up hill instead of down.

"The honest, ordinary, everyday clodpoper would have reported the surveyor's mistake as soon as he discovered it, but Fair didn't. No, sir; he just went on with the canal, remarking that if the surveyor and the head contractors wanted to make water flow up hill it was none of his business; he wouldn't interfere.

About three weeks afterward the head contractors discovered the blunder that had been committed and wrote to Fair, asking him to come down and see them. He wrote back saying he was too busy. They wrote again, telling him they would pay him for lost time if he would come. He wrote back saying he couldn't think of such a thing. "A few days passed by, then the head man among the contractors appeared in Fair's camp. Jim was just rushing things—had 150 horses and mules, and he would pay him for lost time if he would come. He wrote back saying he couldn't think of such a thing. "A few days passed by, then the head man among the contractors appeared in Fair's camp. He wrote back saying he couldn't think of such a thing.

"See here, Fair," he said, "there's a little mistake here, and before you go any further we'd better rectify it." "No, sir; oh, no; couldn't think of quitting before the job is completed."

"I'll give you $10,000 to quit right now." "No, sir; oh, no; couldn't think of quitting before the job is completed."

"Can't I never like to undertake a thing without finishing it, and I—me I'll finish this canal company. You're responsible for the work, not I." "I'll give you $25,000."

"Mr. Fair," says the man, getting pale about the lips, "if you'll only call your man off, just stop work right here, and release your contract and give me $50,000 clear."

"Fair stopped his men, took a check for $50,000 and went to San Francisco and had it cashed. He was Mr. James G. Fair then. From San Francisco he went to Virginia City, and there made his fortune in speculation."—Stockton Mail.

Hale Bros. & Co.

Steadily but surely forging ahead. That's the state of our business to-day. That's been its past history. There are good reasons why our trade has been one successful stride forward. Advertising has done its part, polite and attentive help has done its part, but most of all the fact that our values have been and are to-day better than those of any house in this city has played the greatest part toward increasing our sales. We depend upon merit and merit alone to secure your patronage. To-day finds us with a much larger stock than ever before. Better values cannot be found upon the coast than are represented here. Take any line of goods in any department and we guarantee the qualities and prices against any quotations on this slope. We would like you to see the line of Dress Goods in Combination Suits that we are selling for $12 a suit. Not that they are any better value than those at $7 50 or $22 50, but the variety at $12 per suit far exceeds any other lines. If you are not ready to buy take the time to look. It will prove a paying investment of time.
