Lieutenant Finley's Cold Wave Arrives on Time.

The Storm Season Approaching—Observer Barwick Describes the Phenomena of Storms.

The Weather Bureau's reports show that the barometer is quite low and falling in this State, and above, thirty inches and rising in Oregon, which gives rise to stiff and drying northerly winds.

The dew point yesterday afternoon was as low as 26°—that is, the temperature of the air would have had to have been reduced to a temperature of 26° before a particle of moisture could have been squeezed out of it.

The highest and lowest one year ago to-day were 74° and 54°.

There was no rain yesterday morning south of Oregon. The low barometer and the storm that brought rain to Washington, Oregon and the north-west coast of California, as far south as Eureka, has passed rapidly to the east and northeastward, and we will therefore get no precipitation from that cyclonic area.

As the rainy season is now close at hand, it may be of interest to the public to know something of the atmospheric conditions attending upon rain.

Whenever storms occur in the rainy season, with a barometer above the mean, they are usually preceded, accompanied and followed by northerly and variable winds.

Storms with a barometer below the mean will be found to be preceded and followed by easterly, westerly, southerly and southeasterly winds, and followed by westerly winds—that is, ranging from southwest to northwest.

Storms with a barometer above the mean are more apt to fall during the storm than otherwise, while storms with southerly winds usually increase the temperature.

The usual outlook for storms in this vicinity at any time during the rainy season are as follows, viz: Cirrus clouds make their appearance in the west in advance of rain, moving from the southwest or west; the wind blows fresh to brisk from the southeast.

As long as the wind remains in the southeast and blows fresh and brisk from 25 to 25 miles per hour, no cessation of the storm is liable to be looked for.

When the wind and clouds both come from the southwest and west the storm may be said to have passed over, although some slight showers may fall.

When the wind and clouds both come from the southwest and west the storm may be said to have passed over, although some slight showers may fall.

The above description is the usual routine of local meteorological signs that always take place in this valley, at least this portion of it.

Sometimes in our winter storms the rapid fluctuations of the barometer from considerably below 30 inches to considerably above it, are very common.

To briefly sum up, the local storm warnings for this vicinity would be, then, a steadily and sometimes rapidly falling barometer, fresh and southerly winds, back to south and southeast, the appearance of cirrus clouds rapidly forming into cirro-stratus and stratus clouds; the cirrus moving from the west-southwest, and cirro-stratus from the south-southwest, and the stratus from the south.

The wind will change and move from the southeast, rapidly and steadily, in a few hours, light rain begins to fall. This continues more or less during the fall of the barometer, and continues during the rise of that instrument until the rain ceases near the mean for the season, when the wind will veer to the south and southwest; but is usually preceded by the clouds changing from a southeast to a southwesterly direction.

After the wind's direction ceases to be affected by the passing storm it will veer and sometimes go back to southwest and south, with gentle breezes for days at a time, until affected by another storm wave.

This is the usual procedure of local phenomena during the rainy or winter season, and it is the duty of intelligent citizens to observe the signs of its occurrence for any deviation from it during the months from September to May.

figures concerning wells already in use in that locality. Mr. Clark's well, only 100 feet deep, supplies a pump raising 60,000 gallons per hour, and is not exhausted; in fact, Mr. Clark believes it would supply two such pumps.

The system which is not patented, but is free to all—a well illustrated on the ranch of Charles Mack, near the Union House. Mr. Mack put a large pump along with a well, to supply sufficient water. He then bored other wells a few feet distant from the first, and connected all of them below the line of starting water, thereby securing an artesian flow from the auxiliary wells to supply the main well.

It is evident to any one who sees these wells that any quantity of water can be secured in this way.

The Improvement Company or any one else desires to sink experimental wells, with a view of obtaining better water for the city, I will gladly furnish pumps of any capacity free of charge to test the wells.

UBRISH FIRES. Judge Cravens says He Will Enforce the Penalty Therefor.

Arthur Balger and P. Traub, proprietors of the saloon formerly kept by Robert Allen, on Seventh street, between J and K, were found guilty yesterday by Judge Cravens of violating Ordinance No. 17, and fined $20 each.

They had deposited a lot of rubbish from their cellar upon the street in front of the saloon. Health Officer Nichols happened along and considered to have the proprietors arrested for dumping rubbish in the street.

In the Police Court yesterday the defendants explained that they had taken the rubbish in the street until they could get a wagon the next morning to haul it away. During the evening some street cleaners came and took the pile and the smoke annoyed the people of the neighborhood.

In passing sentence Judge Cravens said he proposed to take the circumstances, to make the fine light, but in future persons arrested for a similar offense might expect to receive severe punishment.

PAILED TO SHOW UP. Painful Produced No Proofs, and Scheppleman Was Discharged.

The case of A. Scheppleman, charged with evicting the Paladini family from a house without authority, was dismissed in the Police Court yesterday. Acting City Attorney, G. G. Davis, stated that the prosecution had no witnesses except Mr. Paladini, and he was not at the house when the family were forced out into the street. The case was accordingly dismissed.

Paladini made a vigorous protest to several of his countrymen when he made their request that the case be dismissed. He said he had not been treated fairly, and he proposed to go to the District Attorney.

Judge Cravens stated after court had adjourned that Paladini had been instructed several times to bring down his witnesses, but he failed to pay any attention to the instructions.

Capay Valley Lands.

A CAPAY COLONY. The balance of the tract, 373 acres, was purchased by the Western Colony Company, and finally, on the 5th of June, 1890, the Western Colony Company was organized and incorporated.

THE SATISFACTORY working of this scheme has been the subject of considerable attention to the work of the Colony Company, and a number of people are now desirous of joining in with them.

For the Colony Company is predicted a very bright future, as well as for the beautiful valley in which their operations are conducted.

The fruits set out are mostly of the standard varieties—peaches, apricots, Bartlett pears, prunes, figs, raisin grapes, etc., while along the main thoroughfares, throughout the tract, walnuts will be planted.

A petition has been circulated recently and very largely signed, asking the county to accept Island No. 1, in the county of Yuba, and to build a bridge across Cache Creek at this point, in order to give the settlers on the east side of the creek access to the market.

The following is a list of the principal members of the Tanager Colony, with the number of acres owned by each, and a list of their names.
