THE PRESS AND THE CHICAGO FAIR.

The Columbian Exposition was projected to be a world's fair. It would seem, however, that the scheme is degenerating into a plan to hold a Chicago show and nothing more. To that end Chicago is laboring to "work" the newspaper press of the country.

In addition to this handsome salary there is under its beneficiary chief a corps of well-paid clerks, engravers and printers. These prepare all manner of gushing matter concerning the preparations for the fair, and forward it to the cartload with all periodicals throughout the land with urgent requests to publish the same, fortified by inflated appeals to the patriotism and public spirit of publishers.

It is probable that the illustrated papers, just now so "generous" in their pictorial efforts to enlighten the people concerning the projected fair, come in for a large share of the plunder. It is evident that the purpose of this Bureau of Publicity and Promotion is to establish a costly newspaper department. But the scheme is not prospering. The decent press is jealous of all attempts to control its columns. It is not taking kindly to the plan, and some of the Chicago wing of directors, say the dispatches, as well as of the Board of Control of the National Commission, are considering the suggestion to abandon the imprudent scheme.

Major Handy, who luxuriates at the head of the wasteful department, is reported to have said that the movement to deprive him of his fat pickings arises from conviction on the part of several directors that newspapers are finding out too much, but as for him, while he is at the head of the department, there shall be no concealment and that he will not be a party to any star chamber business. This virtuous gush on the part of the Major deceives no one. It is intended simply to impugn the motive of those directors who see in the newspaper bureau an uneconomic expenditure and a plan to fatten favorites. At the same time, the management of the fair is wrestling with the proposal to solicit from Congress a loan of $5,000,000. It is not likely that the advance will be made unless there is radical reform and the international purposes that gave birth to the idea of a Columbian Exposition are returned to in sincerity.

The newspaper press of the country is not wanting in enterprise. It is entirely competent to care for its own interests. The chief of these is the publishing of news. It can get its own news in its own way and operates agencies, corporate and individual, that are equal to its demands. It does not need to be fed by bureau-prepared news, much less to have matter for its readers manufactured by a costly department at the expense of the people's purse. Whatever advertising the World's Fair at Chicago needs, let it order and pay for precisely as do other businesses. If the Bureau or Department of Publicity and Promotion is continued it will emphasize the drift of the World's Fair into the Chicago show, and will tend to complete defeat of the original idea to hold a national jubilee exposition with all the peoples of the world as guests.

The National Directory of the exposition will need to put a bit in the mouth of the Chicago Directors if the whole scheme is not to degenerate into a mere Chicago boom for the hotel-keepers and restaurateurs of the Windy City.

Certainly the spirit now prompting a portion of the directors to abolish Major Handy and his literary bureau should be approved. This may be taken as assured, the self-respecting, independent press of the country will not submit to the stuffing that this publicity bureau is promoting, and which thus far has proved successful with such of the press only as has been gagged by fat payments to permit Major Handy and his clerks, printers and engravers to run into its columns whatever slush the bureau sees fit to grind out, and which, as a rule, has proved thus far to be of an order of weakly literature that most newspapers deny their columns.

Mr. JULES SIMON, in the New Review, pleads for a reform in the factory customs, that will permit women workers time to attend to care of their modest homes--to make the beds, prepare dinner, see their children by daylight, assure themselves of the educational progress of their little ones, and by mere presence prepare the hearts of children to love goodness. "To ask this is to ask society to protect itself against the greatest danger it has incurred for many centuries." It is not so bad as that in America in our places of employment, but as the RECORD-UNION has constantly held, the employment of women in business vocations in America that properly belong to the natural bread winners, is to unfit them in large part for domestic duties, and to cultivate them away from domesticity and the home. M. Simon says that at Elberfeld the employers were so convinced of the "hired girl" that they agreed to take each a "hired girl" from the factories into their homes for one year, for each one so taken, and there to have them taught the arts of housewifery. The result has been that these women are greatly more sought in marriage, and are far more inclined to become co-workers in founding homes. In their houses, when they marry, order prevails, and the housewifely arts are practiced that are neglected or unknown in the homes of most other operatives.

THE Review of Reviews, with considerable bitterness, "regrets that the American press should have been so ready to take up loose accusations brought by interested parties against our Minister to Chile, Mr. Patrick Egan." With reflection the Review may discover that if in some respects Mr. Egan was possibly harshly judged by his countrymen, it was not because of any error upon their part. It was due to his unaccountable and as yet unexplained silence at a time when it was his duty to have informed his Government. Moreover, the Review, in its sharp criticism of "the newspapers of the country," is in error when it says that they were influenced by those who were interested in Mr. Egan's discomfiture; on the contrary, jealous regard for the honor of our own land actuated them. It needed but a word from the Minister to have removed every cause of complaint, but he has not even to this date spoken it. An impartial jury of intelligence could not possibly find against the American press for its protest against Mr. Egan's silence. As for the accusations of his enemies, that he was financially interested in Balmaceda's success, it found no footing in this country because it was unaccompanied by any proofs of verity, and it has already been forgotten. The newspaper press of America in its impulsiveness is not infrequently in error in its judgment of public men, but that it has done Patrick Egan any wrong remains to be proved.

RICHARD HENRY STODDARD labors in the North American Review to prove that Lowell was greater than his work. That could not be. No man is greater than the product of his genius, skill or courage. It is the accomplishment, the achievement of the worker that gives the true measure of the man. Mr. Stoddard's claim is that what Lowell's work was some of us may have forgotten in a measure, and others may have never known, except in a casual and fragmentary way. But suppose this to be so, all the knowledge of the world has Lowell, or of any other man, is his work. This may be direct with some, and collateral with others. We feel influences very often the depths of which we have not probed, and the sources of which we do not understand. Known or unknown it was the work of Lowell, his acts as a diplomatist, his elegance as a writer, his fervor as a patriot, his force as a reasoner, his wit and sweetness as a poet, his bearing as a gentleman, that enabled the world to judge him, and we think it follows logically that he did not and could not rise superior to these works. He may have felt higher aspirations, may have been ambitious to do more; may have fretted that he was not able to carry with him in the world a larger following of sympathy, but these unknown desires did not make him greater than the work that revealed him.

While the second and third rate politicians are insisting that the free coinage question is not, and will not be the real issue in the near future, Henry Cabot Lodge, who forecasts with extreme caution, says in the Forum that "it will be the issue" in 1892. He holds that before the election of 1892 the Democracy will have formulated its tariff views in a platform which the Republicans will assail, putting the Democrats upon the defensive. But the silver or money question, he holds, will thrust the tariff issue into the background because of the cry for cheaper money; because it has become a test question of a large number of voters of varied views and interests, and who are "discontented with existing social and financial conditions." The Alliance has declared, not uncertainly, upon the silver question, and the Republican party, contending that the Alliance is an ally of its enemy, will contest with it openly. Finally, he thinks, Congress will pass a free coinage act, but the President will certainly veto it. On that the two parties will go to the country, and free coinage will be the dominant issue, concludes Mr. Lodge.

It is worthy to be noted, that no apprehension may be entertained that the dispatch in reference to Jewish bankers of Europe combining to cripple Russian finances, has reference to the commercial loans of the Czar. It is a matter of history that the Rothschilds, who control in these matters, are under oath, and have been for generations, never to engage in any operation to corner or speculate upon Russian breadstuffs, or deal in any fund that would tend to injure the breadstuffs supply and distribution. It is recorded that this oath has never been broken, and it is not likely that it ever will be. The reading of the dispatches, therefore, concerning the reported opening of the financial battle, should be had with this understanding, in order that the movements of the financiers may be clearly comprehended.

THE reason why the Sultan has been constrained to consent to the carrying past his doors, at the Dardanelles, of Russian military supplies intended to form a basis in the Black Sea for assault upon his Capital, is not difficult to discover. He knows that he cannot rely upon the aid of any great power to second him if he resists. France would not, of course; Germany, by her quiescence, has clearly made it apparent that she is not feeling deep interest in the matter and desires peace above all things; Austria could not if it would, and Italy dare not without consent of her colleagues in the alliance, even if she felt disposed. England alone could join with the Porte in protest and resistance. But England is not prepared for the conflict that might result, and prefer, as is disclosed by recent dispatches, to demand the same privilege granted to Russia, to pass military supplies through the Dardanelles, and trust to the future, whatever may be the result.
