

THE STELLAR LECTURE.

Professor Barnard Draws an Immense Audience.

A Lecture Replete With Interest and Beautifully Illustrated by Telescopic Photographs.

The interest in the lecture announcement for the benefit of the School of Design by Professor E. E. Barnard, of the Faculty of the Lick Observatory, was such that the immense audience gathered in the Metropolitan Theater last night.

Long before the time for opening the doors the entrance was packed with people, and when the doors opened a perfect crush took place, so that it was with the utmost difficulty that tickets were taken.

At 7:45 standing room only was announced in all parts of the house, and a great number of people were turned away, unable to gain admission.

It is announced this morning that those holding unused tickets who applied and could not get into the theater will have their money refunded by those of whom they purchased them.

Professor Barnard is a young man, of quiet presence, sensitive almost to timidity and evidently fears that he cannot make his subject deeply interesting to his hearers. But in this he is mistaken.

He speaks deliberatively, in a conversational manner, with the air of a man who has made every effort at elocutionary effects. He has a vein of humor and it crops out very pleasantly here and there.

The value of a lecture, and the attention awakened, is in the attention given by an intelligent audience. Professor Barnard had as fine an audience last night as ever gathered in Sacramento, and he held his undivided attention for two hours.

He began by expressing the pleasure he felt in being able to contribute his services in aid of such worthy institutions as the Museum Association and its School of Design. He had passed a delightful period in the art gallery and school, and paid the city a high compliment in the possession of these educational institutions.

The lecture was devoted to an explanation of the spectroscopic as used in astronomy to determine the composition of the stellar system and other characteristics; to compare clear, deeply interesting statements of astronomical facts, and especially those relating to more recent discoveries concerning the multitude of stars and other heavenly bodies.

These discoveries are due mainly to the introduction of photography in telescopic work by the use of the dry plate instead of the wet plate. By this use and the exceeding lengthened exposure of the plate possible—extending from one to over four hours—there have been revealed to an astonished world the fact that the stars capable of being seen upon the photographic plate exceed by countless millions those that can be seen by the unaided eye, and by many hundreds of thousands those revealed by the most powerful telescope.

His explanation of the reason of the truth was very clear, but is too long to be reproduced here. In the main, however, it results from the ability to keep the photographic image of the stars for a long time, and in the meanwhile exposing the dry plate long enough for stars, and suns and worlds not heretofore even contemplated as possible by the most vivid imagination, to print themselves by their light upon the photographic plate.

It was because of the mounting of instruments in this direction that he entitled his lecture "Recent Photographic and Visual Astronomy."

To attempt an adequate synopsis of a lecture of such extent, and so rich in information of a technical character, in the ordinary report of a newspaper, at the time allotted, is to invite failure. All that can be done is to give some idea of the character of the lecture and its extent.

to sweep the heavens. This field thrown upon the screen was not larger than the crown of a silk hat and showing a few hundred stars. Contrasted to this was then shown what the dry plate photographic shows in a single exposure of the scope. This was a space about twelve by eight feet, and within it were revealed myriads of stars and suns.

The "milky way" views were very fine, in the opinion of many the best of the exhibition. They proved that our previous conceptions of the composition of the universe with regard to the "milky way" truth; that it is peopled by stars and suns and star clouds in countless numbers, exceeding any ideas ever formed of prior to the application of dry plate photography to astronomy.

We have referred, necessarily, in these notes to but a part of the topics treated. At the close of the lecture Professor Barnard was warmly applauded. So many were unable to gain admission last night that the idea was entertained of asking the lecturer to return to-night. But it was concluded that the notice would be too brief in time to notify the people secure an audience that would do the occasion a speaker honor, and hence it was decided to ask Professor Barnard to come again at a later date and deliver his lecture on a comet. That proposition he has under consideration. If he consents he can be assured that the desire of the observatory faculty to popularize the knowledge gained by research at Mount Hamilton will be promoted in this city, and that he will have another intelligent and large audience.

EASTERN EDITORS

The State Board of Trade Will Invite Them to California.

At the meeting of the State Board of Trade in San Francisco on Tuesday, a letter from J. A. Woodson of the Record-Union and others was read asking that the State Board join in inviting the National Editorial Association to hold its next convention in California.

It is planned to hold the convention, if it can be had under consideration. If he consents Mr. Mills made a stirring address favoring the coming of the quill-drivers. "I'd rather have one of these live newspaper men here than a hundred delegates from any of our national political conventions."

It was agreed to give financial help, to the extent of $500, to a committee from the state newspaper men, who are to go to Cincinnati to extend the invitation to the Executive Committee of the association. Mr. Galatin expressed the opinion that the San Francisco subscribers of the board would willingly double their monthly subscriptions in order to help along this project.

LOCAL HEALTH LAWS.

How They Are Being Daily Violated or Ignored.

Contagious Diseases Spread Thereby—Arrest of a Doctor for Failing to Report a Scarlet Fever Case.

The City Board of Health and Health Officer Nichols are to be commended for the energy which they are displaying in the matter of the enforcement of the health ordinances. It will be remembered that at the last meeting of the board the statement was made that a child had died of scarlet fever in a house on E street, and that several other cases had resulted close by, but that no warning placard had been placed on the house where the first case occurred, as required by law.

The matter was referred to Health Officer Nichols to investigate, and he found such to have been the case. The family is named Crabb, and resides on E street, between Seventeenth and Eighteenth. A child had died, and the mother admitted that the house had not been placarded. The attending physician was Dr. M. F. Clayton.

Four children in the family of D. D. Paxter, who lives next door to the Crabb residence, were stricken with the disease, the first being a child, and it resulted fatally. The other three children are still down with the disease. This house was properly placarded.

The facts were laid before City Attorney Hart, and yesterday Dr. Clayton was arrested for violating the ordinance requiring physicians to report cases of diphtheria, scarlet fever, measles, etc., promptly to the Board of Health. He gave a bond of $100 for his appearance.

In almost every case an officer whose members of families in which these cases prevail violate the ordinance by mingling with their neighbors, also of children being sent to school from houses where scarlet fever and diphtheria exist. The law is very stringent against these, and all that is needed is for some police officer to complain in order to have the guilty parties punished.

The fact has also come to light that patients with children had been attacked with contagious diseases of the character mentioned in the ordinance, have refrained from calling in physicians in order to avoid having their houses placarded. This class of people prefer to take the risk of their children dying rather than have placards placed on their houses.

Just as there should be such a precaution on the heads of families to these warning notices it is difficult to conceive. It is hard enough to have the lives of one's own children in danger, and to have the family, endangered by malignant disease, but no person should be so indifferent to the safety of a whole community as to wish to conceal from his neighbors the fact of the existence of sickness in his own family.

There is an epidemic of scarlet fever now sweeping the city, and every good citizen should do his duty by notifying the Health Board of any violation of the ordinances that may come under his notice, even if he has to suffer thereby the loss of some neighbor's good will.

That indictment. It is said that the party indicted by the Grand Jury on Tuesday for conspiracy is a certain ex-Senator from San Francisco who helped to make the State's laws a couple of sessions ago. He was allowed some $3,000 for expenses incurred in contesting a seat in the Senate three years ago, but if it is claimed that he pocketed all that money, instead of paying the claims of those for whose services it was voted.

Then came views of various star sections of the heavens. These wonderful revelations, he assured the spectators, enabled them to see by the aid of the magic lantern what no telescope now or ever can reveal to the eye. It showed suns and stars by countless myriads to exist where by the telescope view they are, compared to the photographic revelation, but very few. The heaves, the marvelous distances, the stupendous numbers of stars and their relative sizes, the dark, unfathomed space-pathways winding among them were dilated upon, with a plenitude of other astronomical facts added.

Then came views of nebulae in great number, and these were especially rich and profoundly interesting. These were followed by views of the planets Mars, Jupiter and Saturn, the transit of Mercury, the transit of Venus; the sun's envelope and sun spots; the great red spot in Jupiter; the canals and seas of Mars; the rings of Saturn and their apparent disappearance last month.

"SHORTY" HAYES.

The Notorious Highwayman in the Toils Again.

He is Recaptured at Spokane Falls—Something About His Exploits.

"Shorty" Hayes, alias a hundred other names, the noted highwayman, who has "done business" with such notorious outlaws as Charles Dorsey, "Mickey" Delaney, Shinn, Patterson, Tom Bell and others, and who is at present a fugitive from justice, has been captured at Spokane Falls.

A policeman named Davies of that place made the arrest. It was while some improvements were being made at the San Quentin Prison several years ago that Davies first met Hayes. Hayes was employed to take charge of a gang of convicts.

Who were set at work bricklaying. Hayes was among the gang, and Davies had an opportunity of seeing him daily. Hayes was considered one of the most dangerous convicts in the prison at that time. He had twice attempted to escape, his last attempt being nearly successful. The guards stood in dread of him—in fact he was the terror of San Quentin. It was at Spokane Falls that he succeeded in getting out of jail, and his whereabouts were unknown until he bumped into Davies a few days ago at Spokane. Hayes thought the fact was that he had been released from prison, and he was very glad to be free. Hayes, who was a few years ago a stage-coach driver and express company in California. After consultation with the Chief of Police, Officer Davies came to the conclusion that the presence of Hayes in that city was not required, and acting on the principle that it might be needed somewhere else, arrested Hayes and a party of his associates.

At first Hayes took his arrest indifferently, presuming that his identity was not known. "I suppose you've got me on the old charge of vagrancy," was his salutation. When asked his name he replied Dan Costello. The searching process was now begun. Hayes vigorously protested against being rifled. Nothing of a suspicious nature was found upon his person, however. A card bearing the name of a Sacramento hotel was among the relics.

"Were you ever in Sacramento?" he was asked. "Well, yes; only one night, though," was the response.

PROUD OF HIS EXPLOITS. A representative of the Spokane Spokesman interviewed Hayes in jail. At first "Shorty" was disposed to rail himself as Costello, but after a little he admitted his identity and became quite talkative. "I suppose I might as well tell the truth," said he. "I'm 'Shorty' Hayes, and I don't use digging up by-gones and going into my past record."

"Ever in San Francisco?" "You mean the State Prison? I know that building pretty well," and the little gray eyes twinkled. "I served seven years in that place, one day in that institution, and I hope I'll never see it again."

"When did you leave?" "On the first day of this month I turned my face eastward, and here I am again behind the bars. Ever try to escape? Indeed I did. Who wouldn't, I'd like to know."

Hayes went on to relate the particulars of the crime that brought him there, and seemed to take especial delight in recounting his adventures. He is now 29 years of age when sent to prison, now he is almost 47 years old. He gave his true name as Costello, and his birthplace Ireland. He claimed to have served a brief distinction in the Union army during the War of the Rebellion.

RIVALING BLACK BART. The story of "Shorty" Hayes' career— even that of which he has ever attained publicity—would fill a book and would rival the romances woven around Black Bart and other notorious road agents. He has comprised some of the best, cunning operators, but at the same time a dare-devil when in close quarters. He would not hesitate a second to take life, if crossed in his nefarious schemes.

The crime for which he last went to jail was, as might be supposed, highway robbery. In 1874 one of Wells, Fargo & Co.'s stage coaches, while routing a long piece of mountainous road in Placer County, was confronted by an organized band of stage robbers. Several shots were fired at the driver. One bullet taking effect. The passengers yielded and the gang plundered everything in sight. Hayes, who was on that hold-up, lost $5,000 in silver, taken from the coach. "Shorty" Hayes was leader of this gang. A big reward was offered, and "Shorty" and several members of the gang were run down and arrested, but before they had been committed to the cells several depredations of a like character in Shasta County and other points in Northern California.

Hayes was examined and several indictments were found against him. Upon just alone he was sentenced to the State Prison for a term of fifty-one years—almost a life sentence. During his incarceration he made several attempts to escape, and finally succeeded. Making full allowance for good conduct marks, which in all likelihood Hayes was never credited with, the duration of his sentence would not cease for at least ten years yet.

GETTING OLD NOW. "Shorty" Hayes is now about 50 years of age, short in stature, and every day "Shorty" indicates, with little gray eyes sunk deep in their sockets, and is of medium build.

He claims to be a competent bricklayer now, having more than learned that trade while in prison, and says he went to Spokane, where he was not known, in order to get work. The two who knew him, however, will smile at this assertion. The identity of the man who was arrested with Hayes has not yet been discovered, though the officials feel sure that he is some notorious character, and probably an ex-member of Hayes' once-dreaded gang of road agents. He is about the same height as Hayes, though stouter. He has prominent blue eyes, the lid of the right eye drooping slightly. He has a scar over his eye, which indicates that some one had used a knife on him at some time.

The authorities at San Quentin have been notified, and Hayes will be brought back to Warden Hale's summer resort.

CHOSEN FRIENDS. Last Evening's Reception to Supreme and Grand Officers. A public meeting of Friendship and Sacramento Councils of the Order of Chosen Friends was held last evening at Firemen's Hall, the occasion being a reception to C. H. Arnold, Supreme Vice-Councilor and Representative to the Supreme Council of the United States, Grand Councilor Hutton of California, and Grand Recorder Mrs. Annie Evans. The hall was literally packed with people, most of whom were ladies.

The visiting officers arrived on the 8:40 train from San Francisco, and committees from the local councils received them at the depot. They were escorted in carriages to the hall and warmly welcomed. After being introduced, each officer made a brief address on subjects pertaining to the work of the order, and expressive of their appreciation of the kindness with which they had been received.

Nice Home at Auction. There will be sold at auction at 10 o'clock to-day, by Bell & Co., a neat and comfortable residence on Nineteenth street, between H and I, adjoining that of ex-Mayor Turner. The lot is 40x80 feet, nicely improved, and the house is a well-arranged two-story structure, containing six rooms and bathroom. It would make a desirable home for a person of moderate means.

The Deadly Smudge. Our City Trustees must all have good lungs. If not, they would do something to prevent the submergence of the city in smoke every winter. The rubbish fires in the streets come to get in their deadly work by choking off invalid children and asthmatic adults. There ought to be a boom in cemetery lots these days.
