COUNTRY ROAD CONSTRUCTION AT THE WORLD'S FAIR. Some one has said that bad roads leading to a market town are the equivalent of a wall about the place with no means of ingress. Systems of bad roads might be more aptly styled absolute decrees of exclusiveness, forbidding trade to enter, while good roads are open doors of cordial invitation.

Very recently the United States Government issued a fat volume of reports of Consuls from all stations where we have Consular service, upon highways and streets abroad and their method of construction. It is a work of very much value.

More recently a leading magazine of the United States entered upon the publication of a series of illustrated articles upon country roads, the first of which we find to be of profound interest. A curious and attractive phase of the paper is its calculation of actual loss by the practical closing of a road by mud, unevenness or washouts.

The official addressed replied, admitting the paramount importance of such a department, and that the subject is one that "is paralleled by no other material interest that is now under such a dense cloud of ignorance."

He believed that such an exhibit is not possible separately and as proposed, with road-work and construction examples upon the roadways of the grounds, because there is now no opportunity to provide a house for the exhibit, while the roadways of the grounds have all been provided to be finished and kept complete.

He added that it is true that as now arranged the fair will not have in it the needed lesson how to build good and cheap country roads, and that the exhibits as provided for in the catalogue will relate mainly to costly roads in the vicinity of large cities.

He added that there might, however, be gathered statistics in great variety and elaboration, diagrams and photographs of good and bad roads at home and abroad, and printed matter for distribution upon the subject of road-making, substructure, bridging, surfacing, drainage and pavements in all variety.

All the facts and the letter have been published, with calls upon the people directly interested to aid in getting the proposed department into shape and having the proper building put up, a year's time being ample to do it.

But the idea of asking the people now to make special contribution of coin to secure such an exhibit at the fair is embarrassing and humiliating. The subject is of such transcendent importance that it ought to be provided for in the general scheme of the exposition, and that it was overlooked is not creditable, for it was nothing less than oversight that scattered road exhibits—many of which relate to other departments also—and failed to provide for a distinct road department.

It is proposed to memorialize Congress concerning the matter, but aid from that direction must be a matter of doubt. The builders of carriages and wagons in the United States might, however, well afford to put up the greater part of the sum needed, for the building needs to be but simple and spacious, if the directory of the fair cannot now provide accommodations for the purpose in a separate or departmental structure.

The outdoor space for working examples it can and probably will provide, but not the working force to illustrate the various systems of road and street-making. The builders of vehicles have an immediate interest in the matter; every mile of good road built and maintained adds to the volume of their business.

Agricultural societies having treasuries with surplus cannot do greater service to the farmer than by expenditure to bring about reform in road-building, and a comprehensive exhibit is in that line. There are, in short, interests sufficient that can raise the means to pay for the working examples and their maintenance—but whether they can be relied upon to do more is a question of much doubt.

Of this we are convinced—that no department of a great fair has a more direct or important relation to the rural interests of the country than one devoted to roads and highways.

The Kern County Echo, in considering the proposition broached in San Francisco, to build a new railroad eastward, remarks: "People are beginning to discover that a multitude of parallel railroads is not the greatest blessing that a country can enjoy. One road between given points is better than three, if the rates charged are regulated by the amount invested and operating expenses. For so sure as three roads are built, the produce of the country must sooner or later pay for three roads."

That is a statement of a truth which is gaining a better footing in the public mind. Whatever the number of railroads built, their maintenance and the reward of the capital invested, must depend upon the sections which furnish the traffic. When the roads exceed the capacity of the country upon which they are dependent, there must follow loss and depression.

In all this effort of San Francisco to convince the producer and consumer of the interior that she is laboring solely for interior good, it will be well to ask, what is the profit in San Francisco on the produce sent to it from the country? What return does the metropolis make? To what extent does it bestir itself to build up and strengthen the interior? What return does the grower receive upon his produce sent to San Francisco, compared with the profit the San Francisco dealer reaps upon the produce? These questions need no answer written here. They make their own response to every producer who deals in the metropolitan market. He knows that he receives the minimum and the San Francisco middle-man the maximum of the margin between cost of production, which includes transportation, and the cost to the consumer of the products.

A Sacred Retic of Shiloh. William Quinn, now connected with the Postoffice Department in this city, has just received a prayer-book which he prizes more than anything else in his possession. The book belonged to his father, Colonel F. Quinn, Twelfth Michigan Regiment, who died at Shiloh, March 17, 1862. It was presented to Colonel Quinn by his wife when he entered the war. The book is a beautiful one, and is now in the hands of his son, William Quinn, who is now in the Postoffice Department.

On April 25, 1731, Daniel Defoe, a butcher's son and a Dissenter, died at the age of seventy, in London. If he had written nothing else, Robinson Crusoe would have insured him a place among the world's literary giants. He was an advanced thinker and his opposition to narrow religious ideas cost him several years of liberty.
