

DAILY RECORD-UNION

ISSUED BY THE SACRAMENTO PUBLISHING COMPANY Office, Third Street, between J and K.

THE DAILY RECORD-UNION, For one year, $6 00 For three months, 3 00 For six months, 1 50

THE WEEKLY UNION, In the cheapest and most desirable Home, News and Literary Journal published on the Pacific Coast.

Special Agencies, This paper is for sale at the following places: L. P. Fisher, room 21, Merchants' Exchange, California street; the principal News Stands and Hotels, and at the Market-Street Ferry, San Francisco.

Los Angeles—Electric Book Store, corner Second and Main streets. SAN DIEGO—Emmal & Co., 860 Fifth street.

SAN FRANCISCO—Hopkins & Cox, Coronado Hotel. SANTA BARBARA—Hastings's News Depot.

Also, for sale on all Trains leaving and coming into Sacramento.

The RECORD-UNION and WEEKLY UNION are the only papers on the Coast, outside of San Francisco, that receive the full Associated Press dispatches from all parts of the world.

Weather Forecast, Official forecast for the twenty-four hours ending at midnight, September 21st: Northern California—Fair, but cloudy and foggy along the coast; southwest to northwest winds; generally warmer.

WILDCAT BANKING—RETROSPECTIVE, The Democratic party proposes, by its platform, if it is put into full power, to repeal the 10 per cent. circulation tax law that runs against State banks.

The Democratic platform of Mr. Cleveland proposes the repeal of the 10 per cent. tax provision, which means to open the door for the possible renewal of the old-time swindles.

The Democratic platform of Mr. Cleveland proposes the repeal of the 10 per cent. tax provision, which means to open the door for the possible renewal of the old-time swindles.

LABOR ORGANIZATION AND PHYSICAL FORCE, The Railway World, referring to the strike at Buffalo, which proved so great a failure, and was marked by acts of violence and tyranny, says:

Every fresh outbreak is followed by the stereotyped declaration that it was not the strikers, but evil-disposed persons over whom they were true. Had the authorities taken the strikers at their word and relaxed their vigilance, it would have been quickly seen how these assurances were well founded.

Which occasions the New York Sun to call the attention of labor organizations to the fact that in order to maintain themselves level with their declarations they must explain to the people how it is that they cannot restrain their membership from acts of violence, while claiming to be sufficiently powerful to order out for a strike and expect and receive obedience?

The question is one that labor organization cannot evade. Labor interests are too great, and the welfare of the skilled workers of the nation is too precious for any such question to be put aside as trivial. It is as the New York Tribune says:

A labor movement, in order to enlist public support, must be conducted by peaceable means. To resort to this is done there is generally among disinterested men a sincere desire for a compromise of some kind, or at least for an impartial hearing, by which the grievances of the workmen may be examined by their employers and substantial justice may be rendered.

Every sincere friend of laboring men; every citizen who stands for fair play equally to capital and labor; every man who is self-respecting, and demands no more from another than he is willing himself to do or submit to, will agree that labor organization is not complete, that its chief end is not and cannot be attained until it is able to absolutely control its membership by conviction of duty to self and to society in repressing lawlessness when strikes are ordered.

Now it is within the capacity of labor organization to do this; it can discipline and control its forces. The moment it does so it founds a new and irresistible claim upon public sympathy and confidence. When it accomplishes that it will have become a great conservative, not a disturbing force; a power operating through methods that invade the rights of no other men, and trespass upon no guarantees of the law to any. When labor organization, we repeat, can, as it must, if it attains the purpose of its creation, conduct its campaigns, contests and strikes without the probability of its membership committing acts of violence, forcible restraint or intimidation; without trespass, invasion or ejectment; it will have risen to a level that will command for it universal respect.

For it is undeniable that the potency of any evil organization in this free Government depends upon its moral rather than physical force. The appeal to the American heart cannot be made with the bludgeon, nor can the American spirit be cowed by tyrannous acts. Labor must prove its claims to respect, confidence and esteem by something more than disavowal of violent proceedings. When the disclaimer is made and the violence still continues, labor organization in whose interest it is manifest takes more serious harm from itself than the most unjust and unsympathetic employers can visit upon it. It is to achieve its triumphs, if they are won, not through bloody struggles and the shock of arms, but through the power of moral force, the convictions of a just and fair dealing and fair-play-loving people.

any evil organization in this free Government depends upon its moral rather than physical force. The appeal to the American heart cannot be made with the bludgeon, nor can the American spirit be cowed by tyrannous acts. Labor must prove its claims to respect, confidence and esteem by something more than disavowal of violent proceedings. When the disclaimer is made and the violence still continues, labor organization in whose interest it is manifest takes more serious harm from itself than the most unjust and unsympathetic employers can visit upon it. It is to achieve its triumphs, if they are won, not through bloody struggles and the shock of arms, but through the power of moral force, the convictions of a just and fair dealing and fair-play-loving people.

The New York Tribune, in a recent article, tells the story of the Farmers' Exchange Bank of Gloucester, Mass.: It was organized with a nominal capital of $1,000,000. Of this $19,141.86 was paid in. The directors subsequently withdrew their subscriptions to the amount of $16,000.75, leaving $3,038.11 for working capital. A general meeting of the stockholders, of which the directors for $1,300 each in notes of the bank's issue and proceeded to administer the affairs of the institution himself. After he had borrowed from the bank $700,265 on personal security by checks for some unaccountable reason, the $700,000 in notes in circulation were estimated at $50,000, the exact record having been used to redeem this there was carefully hoarded in the vaults just $50.46.

Not all the States were so lax in their laws as Indiana, New Jersey and some others, but the best of them were weak compared with what they should have been. New England, after a time, set up the Suffolk banking system, by which the 500 banks in that region agreed to keep balances at the Suffolk Bank in Boston, which was made redemption agent for the banks. This system saved New England a great deal of distress, but could not make her notes of par value. New York set up a deposit security system to back the bank issues. Some States provided an inspection system, but nearly always when the Inspector arrived there came also a few bags of coin by the same stage, to make a "showing," and they went on to the next town with the Inspector to do duty at the next bank.

It would require columns to describe the operations of free banking in 1857, when the failure of an Ohio wildcat "savings" institution precipitated the impending crash, and the great panic of 1857 set in.

In the war period the 10 per cent. bank tax law was passed by Congress that proved a prohibition of State banks of issue, only one surviving it, the Mechanics' of Brooklyn, which still has a small note issue.

The Democratic platform of Mr. Cleveland proposes the repeal of the 10 per cent. tax provision, which means to open the door for the possible renewal of the old-time swindles. True, many States profited by the experience of 1857, and have put on checks and guards, and California is one of them. But not all States have acted wisely, for loose State laws remain, and some have none at all upon the subject; and the repeal would constitute the temptation to manipulate Legislatures, to permit all hands to go into the banking business, to the confusion and loss of the working people especially, who cannot give the time and skill necessary to keep track of counterfeited bills, discounts and depreciated notes.

The Railway World, referring to the strike at Buffalo, which proved so great a failure, and was marked by acts of violence and tyranny, says:

Every fresh outbreak is followed by the stereotyped declaration that it was not the strikers, but evil-disposed persons over whom they were true. Had the authorities taken the strikers at their word and relaxed their vigilance, it would have been quickly seen how these assurances were well founded.

Which occasions the New York Sun to call the attention of labor organizations to the fact that in order to maintain themselves level with their declarations they must explain to the people how it is that they cannot restrain their membership from acts of violence, while claiming to be sufficiently powerful to order out for a strike and expect and receive obedience?

The question is one that labor organization cannot evade. Labor interests are too great, and the welfare of the skilled workers of the nation is too precious for any such question to be put aside as trivial. It is as the New York Tribune says:

A labor movement, in order to enlist public support, must be conducted by peaceable means. To resort to this is done there is generally among disinterested men a sincere desire for a compromise of some kind, or at least for an impartial hearing, by which the grievances of the workmen may be examined by their employers and substantial justice may be rendered.

Every sincere friend of laboring men; every citizen who stands for fair play equally to capital and labor; every man who is self-respecting, and demands no more from another than he is willing himself to do or submit to, will agree that labor organization is not complete, that its chief end is not and cannot be attained until it is able to absolutely control its membership by conviction of duty to self and to society in repressing lawlessness when strikes are ordered.

Now it is within the capacity of labor organization to do this; it can discipline and control its forces. The moment it does so it founds a new and irresistible claim upon public sympathy and confidence. When it accomplishes that it will have become a great conservative, not a disturbing force; a power operating through methods that invade the rights of no other men, and trespass upon no guarantees of the law to any. When labor organization, we repeat, can, as it must, if it attains the purpose of its creation, conduct its campaigns, contests and strikes without the probability of its membership committing acts of violence, forcible restraint or intimidation; without trespass, invasion or ejectment; it will have risen to a level that will command for it universal respect.

For it is undeniable that the potency of any evil organization in this free Government depends upon its moral rather than physical force. The appeal to the American heart cannot be made with the bludgeon, nor can the American spirit be cowed by tyrannous acts. Labor must prove its claims to respect, confidence and esteem by something more than disavowal of violent proceedings. When the disclaimer is made and the violence still continues, labor organization in whose interest it is manifest takes more serious harm from itself than the most unjust and unsympathetic employers can visit upon it. It is to achieve its triumphs, if they are won, not through bloody struggles and the shock of arms, but through the power of moral force, the convictions of a just and fair dealing and fair-play-loving people.

The New York Tribune, in a recent article, tells the story of the Farmers' Exchange Bank of Gloucester, Mass.: It was organized with a nominal capital of $1,000,000. Of this $19,141.86 was paid in. The directors subsequently withdrew their subscriptions to the amount of $16,000.75, leaving $3,038.11 for working capital. A general meeting of the stockholders, of which the directors for $1,300 each in notes of the bank's issue and proceeded to administer the affairs of the institution himself. After he had borrowed from the bank $700,265 on personal security by checks for some unaccountable reason, the $700,000 in notes in circulation were estimated at $50,000, the exact record having been used to redeem this there was carefully hoarded in the vaults just $50.46.

Not all the States were so lax in their laws as Indiana, New Jersey and some others, but the best of them were weak compared with what they should have been. New England, after a time, set up the Suffolk banking system, by which the 500 banks in that region agreed to keep balances at the Suffolk Bank in Boston, which was made redemption agent for the banks. This system saved New England a great deal of distress, but could not make her notes of par value. New York set up a deposit security system to back the bank issues. Some States provided an inspection system, but nearly always when the Inspector arrived there came also a few bags of coin by the same stage, to make a "showing," and they went on to the next town with the Inspector to do duty at the next bank.

It would require columns to describe the operations of free banking in 1857, when the failure of an Ohio wildcat "savings" institution precipitated the impending crash, and the great panic of 1857 set in.

In the war period the 10 per cent. bank tax law was passed by Congress that proved a prohibition of State banks of issue, only one surviving it, the Mechanics' of Brooklyn, which still has a small note issue.

The Democratic platform of Mr. Cleveland proposes the repeal of the 10 per cent. tax provision, which means to open the door for the possible renewal of the old-time swindles. True, many States profited by the experience of 1857, and have put on checks and guards, and California is one of them. But not all States have acted wisely, for loose State laws remain, and some have none at all upon the subject; and the repeal would constitute the temptation to manipulate Legislatures, to permit all hands to go into the banking business, to the confusion and loss of the working people especially, who cannot give the time and skill necessary to keep track of counterfeited bills, discounts and depreciated notes.

The Railway World, referring to the strike at Buffalo, which proved so great a failure, and was marked by acts of violence and tyranny, says:

Every fresh outbreak is followed by the stereotyped declaration that it was not the strikers, but evil-disposed persons over whom they were true. Had the authorities taken the strikers at their word and relaxed their vigilance, it would have been quickly seen how these assurances were well founded.

Which occasions the New York Sun to call the attention of labor organizations to the fact that in order to maintain themselves level with their declarations they must explain to the people how it is that they cannot restrain their membership from acts of violence, while claiming to be sufficiently powerful to order out for a strike and expect and receive obedience?

The question is one that labor organization cannot evade. Labor interests are too great, and the welfare of the skilled workers of the nation is too precious for any such question to be put aside as trivial. It is as the New York Tribune says:

A labor movement, in order to enlist public support, must be conducted by peaceable means. To resort to this is done there is generally among disinterested men a sincere desire for a compromise of some kind, or at least for an impartial hearing, by which the grievances of the workmen may be examined by their employers and substantial justice may be rendered.

Every sincere friend of laboring men; every citizen who stands for fair play equally to capital and labor; every man who is self-respecting, and demands no more from another than he is willing himself to do or submit to, will agree that labor organization is not complete, that its chief end is not and cannot be attained until it is able to absolutely control its membership by conviction of duty to self and to society in repressing lawlessness when strikes are ordered.

Now it is within the capacity of labor organization to do this; it can discipline and control its forces. The moment it does so it founds a new and irresistible claim upon public sympathy and confidence. When it accomplishes that it will have become a great conservative, not a disturbing force; a power operating through methods that invade the rights of no other men, and trespass upon no guarantees of the law to any. When labor organization, we repeat, can, as it must, if it attains the purpose of its creation, conduct its campaigns, contests and strikes without the probability of its membership committing acts of violence, forcible restraint or intimidation; without trespass, invasion or ejectment; it will have risen to a level that will command for it universal respect.

For it is undeniable that the potency of any evil organization in this free Government depends upon its moral rather than physical force. The appeal to the American heart cannot be made with the bludgeon, nor can the American spirit be cowed by tyrannous acts. Labor must prove its claims to respect, confidence and esteem by something more than disavowal of violent proceedings. When the disclaimer is made and the violence still continues, labor organization in whose interest it is manifest takes more serious harm from itself than the most unjust and unsympathetic employers can visit upon it. It is to achieve its triumphs, if they are won, not through bloody struggles and the shock of arms, but through the power of moral force, the convictions of a just and fair dealing and fair-play-loving people.

The New York Tribune, in a recent article, tells the story of the Farmers' Exchange Bank of Gloucester, Mass.: It was organized with a nominal capital of $1,000,000. Of this $19,141.86 was paid in. The directors subsequently withdrew their subscriptions to the amount of $16,000.75, leaving $3,038.11 for working capital. A general meeting of the stockholders, of which the directors for $1,300 each in notes of the bank's issue and proceeded to administer the affairs of the institution himself. After he had borrowed from the bank $700,265 on personal security by checks for some unaccountable reason, the $700,000 in notes in circulation were estimated at $50,000, the exact record having been used to redeem this there was carefully hoarded in the vaults just $50.46.

Not all the States were so lax in their laws as Indiana, New Jersey and some others, but the best of them were weak compared with what they should have been. New England, after a time, set up the Suffolk banking system, by which the 500 banks in that region agreed to keep balances at the Suffolk Bank in Boston, which was made redemption agent for the banks. This system saved New England a great deal of distress, but could not make her notes of par value. New York set up a deposit security system to back the bank issues. Some States provided an inspection system, but nearly always when the Inspector arrived there came also a few bags of coin by the same stage, to make a "showing," and they went on to the next town with the Inspector to do duty at the next bank.

It would require columns to describe the operations of free banking in 1857, when the failure of an Ohio wildcat "savings" institution precipitated the impending crash, and the great panic of 1857 set in.

any evil organization in this free Government depends upon its moral rather than physical force. The appeal to the American heart cannot be made with the bludgeon, nor can the American spirit be cowed by tyrannous acts. Labor must prove its claims to respect, confidence and esteem by something more than disavowal of violent proceedings. When the disclaimer is made and the violence still continues, labor organization in whose interest it is manifest takes more serious harm from itself than the most unjust and unsympathetic employers can visit upon it. It is to achieve its triumphs, if they are won, not through bloody struggles and the shock of arms, but through the power of moral force, the convictions of a just and fair dealing and fair-play-loving people.

The New York Tribune, in a recent article, tells the story of the Farmers' Exchange Bank of Gloucester, Mass.: It was organized with a nominal capital of $1,000,000. Of this $19,141.86 was paid in. The directors subsequently withdrew their subscriptions to the amount of $16,000.75, leaving $3,038.11 for working capital. A general meeting of the stockholders, of which the directors for $1,300 each in notes of the bank's issue and proceeded to administer the affairs of the institution himself. After he had borrowed from the bank $700,265 on personal security by checks for some unaccountable reason, the $700,000 in notes in circulation were estimated at $50,000, the exact record having been used to redeem this there was carefully hoarded in the vaults just $50.46.

Not all the States were so lax in their laws as Indiana, New Jersey and some others, but the best of them were weak compared with what they should have been. New England, after a time, set up the Suffolk banking system, by which the 500 banks in that region agreed to keep balances at the Suffolk Bank in Boston, which was made redemption agent for the banks. This system saved New England a great deal of distress, but could not make her notes of par value. New York set up a deposit security system to back the bank issues. Some States provided an inspection system, but nearly always when the Inspector arrived there came also a few bags of coin by the same stage, to make a "showing," and they went on to the next town with the Inspector to do duty at the next bank.

It would require columns to describe the operations of free banking in 1857, when the failure of an Ohio wildcat "savings" institution precipitated the impending crash, and the great panic of 1857 set in.

In the war period the 10 per cent. bank tax law was passed by Congress that proved a prohibition of State banks of issue, only one surviving it, the Mechanics' of Brooklyn, which still has a small note issue.

The Democratic platform of Mr. Cleveland proposes the repeal of the 10 per cent. tax provision, which means to open the door for the possible renewal of the old-time swindles. True, many States profited by the experience of 1857, and have put on checks and guards, and California is one of them. But not all States have acted wisely, for loose State laws remain, and some have none at all upon the subject; and the repeal would constitute the temptation to manipulate Legislatures, to permit all hands to go into the banking business, to the confusion and loss of the working people especially, who cannot give the time and skill necessary to keep track of counterfeited bills, discounts and depreciated notes.

The Railway World, referring to the strike at Buffalo, which proved so great a failure, and was marked by acts of violence and tyranny, says:

Every fresh outbreak is followed by the stereotyped declaration that it was not the strikers, but evil-disposed persons over whom they were true. Had the authorities taken the strikers at their word and relaxed their vigilance, it would have been quickly seen how these assurances were well founded.

Which occasions the New York Sun to call the attention of labor organizations to the fact that in order to maintain themselves level with their declarations they must explain to the people how it is that they cannot restrain their membership from acts of violence, while claiming to be sufficiently powerful to order out for a strike and expect and receive obedience?

The question is one that labor organization cannot evade. Labor interests are too great, and the welfare of the skilled workers of the nation is too precious for any such question to be put aside as trivial. It is as the New York Tribune says:

A labor movement, in order to enlist public support, must be conducted by peaceable means. To resort to this is done there is generally among disinterested men a sincere desire for a compromise of some kind, or at least for an impartial hearing, by which the grievances of the workmen may be examined by their employers and substantial justice may be rendered.

Every sincere friend of laboring men; every citizen who stands for fair play equally to capital and labor; every man who is self-respecting, and demands no more from another than he is willing himself to do or submit to, will agree that labor organization is not complete, that its chief end is not and cannot be attained until it is able to absolutely control its membership by conviction of duty to self and to society in repressing lawlessness when strikes are ordered.

Now it is within the capacity of labor organization to do this; it can discipline and control its forces. The moment it does so it founds a new and irresistible claim upon public sympathy and confidence. When it accomplishes that it will have become a great conservative, not a disturbing force; a power operating through methods that invade the rights of no other men, and trespass upon no guarantees of the law to any. When labor organization, we repeat, can, as it must, if it attains the purpose of its creation, conduct its campaigns, contests and strikes without the probability of its membership committing acts of violence, forcible restraint or intimidation; without trespass, invasion or ejectment; it will have risen to a level that will command for it universal respect.

For it is undeniable that the potency of any evil organization in this free Government depends upon its moral rather than physical force. The appeal to the American heart cannot be made with the bludgeon, nor can the American spirit be cowed by tyrannous acts. Labor must prove its claims to respect, confidence and esteem by something more than disavowal of violent proceedings. When the disclaimer is made and the violence still continues, labor organization in whose interest it is manifest takes more serious harm from itself than the most unjust and unsympathetic employers can visit upon it. It is to achieve its triumphs, if they are won, not through bloody struggles and the shock of arms, but through the power of moral force, the convictions of a just and fair dealing and fair-play-loving people.

The New York Tribune, in a recent article, tells the story of the Farmers' Exchange Bank of Gloucester, Mass.: It was organized with a nominal capital of $1,000,000. Of this $19,141.86 was paid in. The directors subsequently withdrew their subscriptions to the amount of $16,000.75, leaving $3,038.11 for working capital. A general meeting of the stockholders, of which the directors for $1,300 each in notes of the bank's issue and proceeded to administer the affairs of the institution himself. After he had borrowed from the bank $700,265 on personal security by checks for some unaccountable reason, the $700,000 in notes in circulation were estimated at $50,000, the exact record having been used to redeem this there was carefully hoarded in the vaults just $50.46.

Not all the States were so lax in their laws as Indiana, New Jersey and some others, but the best of them were weak compared with what they should have been. New England, after a time, set up the Suffolk banking system, by which the 500 banks in that region agreed to keep balances at the Suffolk Bank in Boston, which was made redemption agent for the banks. This system saved New England a great deal of distress, but could not make her notes of par value. New York set up a deposit security system to back the bank issues. Some States provided an inspection system, but nearly always when the Inspector arrived there came also a few bags of coin by the same stage, to make a "showing," and they went on to the next town with the Inspector to do duty at the next bank.

It would require columns to describe the operations of free banking in 1857, when the failure of an Ohio wildcat "savings" institution precipitated the impending crash, and the great panic of 1857 set in.

In the war period the 10 per cent. bank tax law was passed by Congress that proved a prohibition of State banks of issue, only one surviving it, the Mechanics' of Brooklyn, which still has a small note issue.

The Democratic platform of Mr. Cleveland proposes the repeal of the 10 per cent. tax provision, which means to open the door for the possible renewal of the old-time swindles. True, many States profited by the experience of 1857, and have put on checks and guards, and California is one of them. But not all States have acted wisely, for loose State laws remain, and some have none at all upon the subject; and the repeal would constitute the temptation to manipulate Legislatures, to permit all hands to go into the banking business, to the confusion and loss of the working people especially, who cannot give the time and skill necessary to keep track of counterfeited bills, discounts and depreciated notes.

The Railway World, referring to the strike at Buffalo, which proved so great a failure, and was marked by acts of violence and tyranny, says:

Every fresh outbreak is followed by the stereotyped declaration that it was not the strikers, but evil-disposed persons over whom they were true. Had the authorities taken the strikers at their word and relaxed their vigilance, it would have been quickly seen how these assurances were well founded.

Which occasions the New York Sun to call the attention of labor organizations to the fact that in order to maintain themselves level with their declarations they must explain to the people how it is that they cannot restrain their membership from acts of violence, while claiming to be sufficiently powerful to order out for a strike and expect and receive obedience?

The question is one that labor organization cannot evade. Labor interests are too great, and the welfare of the skilled workers of the nation is too precious for any such question to be put aside as trivial. It is as the New York Tribune says:

A labor movement, in order to enlist public support, must be conducted by peaceable means. To resort to this is done there is generally among disinterested men a sincere desire for a compromise of some kind, or at least for an impartial hearing, by which the grievances of the workmen may be examined by their employers and substantial justice may be rendered.

Every sincere friend of laboring men; every citizen who stands for fair play equally to capital and labor; every man who is self-respecting, and demands no more from another than he is willing himself to do or submit to, will agree that labor organization is not complete, that its chief end is not and cannot be attained until it is able to absolutely control its membership by conviction of duty to self and to society in repressing lawlessness when strikes are ordered.

Now it is within the capacity of labor organization to do this; it can discipline and control its forces. The moment it does so it founds a new and irresistible claim upon public sympathy and confidence. When it accomplishes that it will have become a great conservative, not a disturbing force; a power operating through methods that invade the rights of no other men, and trespass upon no guarantees of the law to any. When labor organization, we repeat, can, as it must, if it attains the purpose of its creation, conduct its campaigns, contests and strikes without the probability of its membership committing acts of violence, forcible restraint or intimidation; without trespass, invasion or ejectment; it will have risen to a level that will command for it universal respect.

For it is undeniable that the potency of any evil organization in this free Government depends upon its moral rather than physical force. The appeal to the American heart cannot be made with the bludgeon, nor can the American spirit be cowed by tyrannous acts. Labor must prove its claims to respect, confidence and esteem by something more than disavowal of violent proceedings. When the disclaimer is made and the violence still continues, labor organization in whose interest it is manifest takes more serious harm from itself than the most unjust and unsympathetic employers can visit upon it. It is to achieve its triumphs, if they are won, not through bloody struggles and the shock of arms, but through the power of moral force, the convictions of a just and fair dealing and fair-play-loving people.

The New York Tribune, in a recent article, tells the story of the Farmers' Exchange Bank of Gloucester, Mass.: It was organized with a nominal capital of $1,000,000. Of this $19,141.86 was paid in. The directors subsequently withdrew their subscriptions to the amount of $16,000.75, leaving $3,038.11 for working capital. A general meeting of the stockholders, of which the directors for $1,300 each in notes of the bank's issue and proceeded to administer the affairs of the institution himself. After he had borrowed from the bank $700,265 on personal security by checks for some unaccountable reason, the $700,000 in notes in circulation were estimated at $50,000, the exact record having been used to redeem this there was carefully hoarded in the vaults just $50.46.

Not all the States were so lax in their laws as Indiana, New Jersey and some others, but the best of them were weak compared with what they should have been. New England, after a time, set up the Suffolk banking system, by which the 500 banks in that region agreed to keep balances at the Suffolk Bank in Boston, which was made redemption agent for the banks. This system saved New England a great deal of distress, but could not make her notes of par value. New York set up a deposit security system to back the bank issues. Some States provided an inspection system, but nearly always when the Inspector arrived there came also a few bags of coin by the same stage, to make a "showing," and they went on to the next town with the Inspector to do duty at the next bank.

It would require columns to describe the operations of free banking in 1857, when the failure of an Ohio wildcat "savings" institution precipitated the impending crash, and the great panic of 1857 set in.

WEDNESDAY SEPT 21 1892. Today, in Lisbon, the Congress of Orientalists will convene, the King of Portugal, whose portrait we present herewith, himself a distinguished linguist, presiding. The first Congress of Orientalists met in Paris in September, 1873, the founder, M. Leon de Rosny, acting as President. Topics connected with the study of Oriental languages, literature and antiquities will form the subjects of discussion.

A Special Value. LADIES RIBBED MERINO UNION SUITS at 75c each. These are heavy weight, silk trimmed and well finished. A good serviceable garment.

Children's Linen Handkerchiefs. An All-Linen Hemstitched Bordered HANDKERCHIEF, stamped with fancy designs in fast colors. Price, 12 1/2c each.

New Veilings. A choice novelty just received is a TUXEDO NET VEILING, edged with a dainty pattern in chantilly lace, in black, cream and white. Price, 37 1/2c per yard.

Something New. Flower-Pot Covers, made of highly decorated cardboard, come in three sizes at 10, 15 and 20c each. These are to be fastened around common earthen flower-pots and will make them an ornament to any room. The designs are extremely pretty and come from one of the most famous art houses in the United States.

We also have a beautiful assortment of SPLASHERS in tasteful designs. The surface is hard finished and can be cleaned whenever necessary. These are highly ornamental and useful as well. Price, 45c each.

For Smokers. All kinds and styles of PIPES will be found here; also CIGAR and CIGARETTE HOLDERS. We make a specialty of fine MEERSCHAUM and BRIER PIPES. Come and examine, they will interest you and prices are lower than elsewhere, considering quality.

HALE BROS. & CO. WE ARE READY. We have just received our importation of FALL GOODS, which consists of the latest styles and novelties. Ladies should not make purchases until this magnificent stock is inspected.

YOU MAKE A MISTAKE. In buying unreliable COAL OIL, because it is low priced when the safest and best can always be had by simply asking your grocer to send you EXTRA STAR.

W. L. DOUGLAS $3 SHOE FOR MEN. THE BEST SHOE IN THE WORLD FOR THE MONEY. A genuine cowhide shoe, that will not rip, no call, seamless, smooth inside, flexible, more comfortable, stylish and durable than any other shoe ever sold at the price. They equal fine imported shoes costing from $6 to $8.

FRIEND & TERRY Lumber Company. MAIN YARD AND OFFICE, 1310 Second and street. Branch Yard, corner Twelfth and streets.

W. F. FRAZER, Lumber Dealer. Office—Cor. Fifth and I. Streets. SHERWOOD HALL NURSERIES, Timothy Hopkins, Menlo Park, San Mateo County, Cal.

THE SOFT GLOW OF THE FACE. The tea rose is acquired by ladies who use Pizzoni's Complexion powder. Try it.

J. FRANK CLARK, UNDERTAKING PARLORS, 1017-1019 Fourth St., Sacramento. EMBALMING A SPECIALTY. GEORGE W. KAVANAUGH, Undertaker, No. 513 J St., bet. Fifth and Sixth.

JOHN MILLER (Successor to Fritz & Miller), UNDERTAKING PARLORS, 905 K STREET (ODD FELOWS TEMPLE), a complete stock of Undertaking Goods always on hand. EMBALMING A SPECIALTY. Telephone No. 136.

Real Estate, Etc. ARARE OPPORTUNITY. Good Agricultural Land for $10 to $20 per Acre. The Pacific Improvement Company has recently purchased twelve thousand acres of land in the heart of Tehama County, for the purpose of promoting subdivision and settlement. This land embraces lands from first-class Sacramento Valley agricultural land, to land of fair average quality, and is offered at from $10 to $20 per acre, in subdivisions of 40, 80, 120, 160 and 320 acres.

THE OLDEST SAVINGS BANK IN THE CITY, corner Fifth and streets, Sacramento. Capital, $500,000. Reserve fund, $250,000. Term and ordinary deposits, $3,263,945. Loans on real estate January 1, 1892, $3,359,618. Term and ordinary deposits, $1,000,000. Loans on real estate, $1,000,000. Information furnished upon application to Ed. H. Hamilton, Cashier.

CALIFORNIA STATE BANK AND SAFE DEPOSIT VAULTS SACRAMENTO, CAL. Draws Drafts on Principal Cities of the World. SATURDAY HOURS, 10 A. M. to 1 P. M.

FARMERS' AND MECHANICS' SAVINGS BANK. Southwest corner Fourth and J streets, Sacramento, Cal. Guaranteed Capital, $500,000.

PEOPLES SAVINGS BANK. Office, No. 400 J Street, Sacramento. CAPITAL, $250,000. Reserve fund, $125,000. Term and ordinary deposits, $1,000,000. Loans on real estate, $1,000,000. Information furnished upon application to Geo. W. Beckman, President.

CROCKER-WOOLWORTH NATIONAL BANK, Crocker Building, Market and Post streets, San Francisco. PAID UP CAPITAL, $1,000,000. RESERVE, $300,000.

GREGORY BROS. CO., Wholesale Dealers in FRUIT AND PRODUCE. Sole agents for the Davis Green Fruit Packing Machine. Send for circulars.

CURTIS BROS. & CO., General Commission Merchants, Wholesale Dealers in Fruit and Produce, 308, 310, 312 K St., Sacramento. Telephone 37. Postoffice Box 335.

<