A DEAD CHINAMAN.

His Body Found Near the River and His Death a Mystery.

A dead body was found by J. A. Speers on Saturday afternoon in the brush near the river below Y street. Speers, who was fishing, returned and reported the case to Coroner Clark, whose assistants were dispatched to the place, but for some reason failed to find the body on Saturday evening. Yesterday morning, however, they discovered it and found it to be the remains of a Chinaman. The body was in a bad stage of decomposition and the man had evidently been dead for some weeks.

From the position of the body the deceased is believed to have lain down and died where he was found, but it was so situated that if he died from violence that fact could scarcely have been established. So far the body has not been identified by the Chinese.

A resolution was also passed to the effect that all land owners who desired to dig the proposed canal on their own account, largely to do so at the price of ten cents per cubic yard, and the Trustees were ordered to enter into contract for such work, immediately.

The canal is to be ten feet wide and five feet deep, several owners will enter on this work immediately.

Five nominations were made for Trustees, and the following were elected: A. T. J. Reynolds (re-elected); Howard J. Kercheval (re-elected); and George L. Figg, vice Peter Hanson, who declined the nomination on account of his health.

Editor McFarland of the Folio Telegraph has been presented with the first ripe orange by the season by Ralph Currier. It was not a big one, but was very nice.

The fall of the year is a trying season for elderly people. The many cheerless, dark, dismal days act depressingly, not to say injuriously, on both old and young. Now is the time to reinforce the vital energies with Ayer's Sarsaparilla—the best of all blood medicines.

"BEACON LIGHTS IN HISTORY."

The Place of the Prophet in the Life of the World.

Synopsis of a Sermon Preached Yesterday at Pythian Hall by Rev. Mr. Horner.

At Pythian Hall yesterday morning Rev. T. J. Horner took for his text: "I am come that they might have life, and that they might have it more abundantly." John 1, 9.

In opening his discourse the speaker reviewed the scientific method of ascertaining truth, and said that it was fast becoming the universal method by entering every field of human thought.

Religion, he said, was man's effort to live in harmony with God. The expression of this effort is written in the history of the world. It has written Bibles, creeds and covenants; built altars, temples and tombs; created institutions that have reached out to shelter as well as to enslave the world.

On its divine side it blossoms out into all the attributes of love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness and humility.

In the expression of its human side, as seen in its history, it is subject to the scientific method.

On the side of spirit it is above and beyond all science. Science, when applied to its history, nearly clears the ground and the soil in which the flowers of the soul grow and flourish, done that it is all it can do. The method applied to the Bible is called in science "The scientific method." This method, like a restless tide, having once washed the shores of religion's dogma, will not retreat until all that is false shall have been washed away.

Science never originates anything. It simply works up material at hand. Evolution can do no more than account for the prophet in the life of the world; for the fact of his coming into existence here, but not for his power after he comes.

I believe, he said, it is possible to account for Jesus by a careful scientific study of the forces of the universe, and the Hebrew nation previous to his appearance. But that does not account for the power of his personality after his appearance. That is the mystery that will elude the facts that may prepare the way for him, and I am with you delighting in the study; but at the end we stand amazed, as we stand before the fact that he feels within his soul, is driven to throw himself against the conservation of the world and proclaim his "Thus sayeth the Lord."

The process of making the genius is, after all, God's process. We have simply discovered that God works by an orderly method, instead of by the haphazard. The great mystery back of the process still remains inscrutable. Herbert Spencer calls it "the unknowable"; Matthew Arnold, "that power which selects which makes for righteousness"; we call it God.

I glory in the spirit of the age, and would not stem the tide of civilization, though it pause not even upon the threshold of eternity. For myself I prefer to be at the very height, amid the turmoil of minds in commotion, anxious always to tear away the false and the base; yet I would not forget, nor would I have you forget, that there are some things in the life of the world that have not been moved.

God not only has spoken in the past, but does not speak directly to the human soul. Place yourself, or be placed by circumstances in the attitude of communion and God will come in and dwell upon your soul. His voice will come and compel you to assume the prophet's role and proclaim the truth as you see it in the world about you and as you feel it from within.

Before speaking particularly upon this subject, I wish to ask your attention for a few moments to a philosophy of life which is coming to be known as Utilitarianism.

It grows out of the scientific method, and does not take its side in the matter of right and wrong, but is placed by circumstances in the attitude of communion and God will come in and dwell upon your soul. His voice will come and compel you to assume the prophet's role and proclaim the truth as you see it in the world about you and as you feel it from within.

All very good—as far as it goes. But the trouble is it does not go far enough. The deep things of the soul are overlooked. Fortunately the world does not depend upon utility alone for its moral development. The prophet's voice has always called men to a higher and nobler pleasure to self-sacrifice for the good of all.

In the providence of God he has sent me to the world to speak to you on the consciousness that God was speaking through him in order that the world might have life and have it more abundantly.

The prophet is conscious that the message he brings will not be welcomed by the great majority of men, but being a man himself he is conscious that all men have the capacity to see life in the light that he sees it in if he can only awaken them to a knowledge of the full import of his message.

I cannot say that the prophet's voice promises more happiness or pleasure than the world already enjoys. I cannot say that I get more pleasure out of life than the savage of South Africa. But I do feel conscious of enjoying a higher order of life than that which is known to the world.

On the contrary, the higher the nature the greater the contrast in the soul with the existing order, and the more sensitive and loving the nature the greater the suffering resulting from the knowledge of such contrast.

Jesus wept over Jerusalem. Why should he? Why should he grieve over the soul-poverty of a city that was satisfied with itself? Why did not his sensitive soul drive him into retirement among his own Galilean hills, where he would be surrounded by those that loved him; where the sin and the sorrows of the great city would not be impressed upon him; where hypocrisy would not stand upon the street-corners making long prayers?

Because he had felt the thrill of the eternal nature in his soul; because his spirit's purity had been filled with God's love. Made thus conscious of his own divine nature, he yearned with an infinite yearning to reveal man's nature to men, that they too might become sons of God.

Happy he no doubt was in his youth. Happy at times when in his wanderings he came out into the open air, and saw the love of God painting the sunset, tinting the petals of the wayside flower, or gently rocking the birds to sleep among the branches of the trees. No doubt every act of true devotion, every exhibition of faith, every deed of charity, thrilled him with joy as it expressed his own nature. Now is the time to reinforce the vital energies with Ayer's Sarsaparilla—the best of all blood medicines.

down his own life that they might have more abundant life. Such is the spirit of the prophet, and by such means the world is thrilled with the consciousness of what is in man.

The Carrington Libel Case. To-day the case of S. E. Carrington, charged with criminal libel, comes up before Justice Devine at 10 o'clock for examination on a complaint of Lincoln White. But that did not seem to drive him away. His own happiness would so have dictated, but once conscious that the world was not enjoying that fullness of life which his own life made him himself-conscious it might enjoy, he could not rest; he could not stay away. Jerusalem must be his burden, and he could not as to the truth of his message, he goes and lays

ACCIDENT TO A BOY.

He Jumped From a Moving Car and Broke His Arm.

The fact that the Trustees have passed an ordinance intended to save the lives and limbs of boys, by making it a misdemeanor for them to jump on or off electric cars while the latter are in motion, does not seem to have had much effect thus far.

On Saturday evening a boy had one of his arms broken by jumping from a car, and if the practice be not checked soon someone will surely be killed.

It appears that about half-past 6 o'clock a lady named Summers boarded an electric car at Oak Park accompanied by two boys, one about 12 and the other 14 years of age. They were to be transferred to the P-street line at Twenty-eighth and P streets, but without waiting for the car to stop the boys went for the rear platform, where one dared the other to jump.

A couple of gentlemen on the platform tried to deter them from leaping from the car, but the boys would not heed their warnings. One jumped and escaped unhurt, but the other was less fortunate. He struck the ground hard, rolled over and over, and got up with a fractured forearm.

The motor-men and conductors cannot be responsible for the safety of people who do not ask to have the cars stopped for them to alight, and if people will persist in jumping on and off cars in motion they will do so at their own risk.

Found the Boy.

A lost four-year-old boy named Willie Boylan was found by Captain Bradley on Saturday evening near Sixth and M streets. He was taken to the police station by the Captain, and later his mother called at the station and took the lad to his home, on Tenth street, between I and J.
