THE TORONTO METHOD.

In the city of Toronto, Canada, a system is in operation for "inducement" of manufacturers to be located in that city.

The method there employed is interesting as illustrating the idea entertained of such a policy in a neighboring country.

In the official reports we find in one case recently that D. C. Adams was applied to establish a rolling mill in that city.

He replied for himself and company that he would do so if sufficient inducement were offered to make it an object to remove a plant to Toronto or to erect a new one.

Thereupon a conference through committee agency was had, and the propositions agreed to were, a lease of a certain site for twenty-one years with privilege of renewal, the rate being nominal, the lessee and his plant to be freed from taxation for ten years, except school rates, and he to have city water at manufacturers' rates.

But the lessee was to bind himself to employ from sixty to 100 hands daily for at least nine months in the year, from December 1, 1883, to January 1, 1885, and for the next two years 120 hands, and for the succeeding years 200 hands a year, strikes, riots or civil commotion closing the works to operate to release him for the days the works were closed.

The lessee was bound not to assign, sublet or use the property for other purposes than manufacture of iron or steel or some other manufacture satisfactory to the council. Failure for six months to operate the works was to work forfeiture of the lease and privileges granted.

For some reason not explained the bargain fell through and was canceled in March of this year—but the statement illustrates how Toronto operates in encouraging the setting up of industries, and how the laws permit the city to exempt from taxation and to contract for industrial promotion.

Another case is found in which the bargain was closed and will probably go into effect. The Ontario Iron and Steel Company bid for location in Toronto under the "inducement" plan. Its capital is stated to be $1,000,000, and a good portion of it was held in stock by citizens of Toronto. They thereby assumed risks as stockholders, but it does not appear that such stock taking was a part of the bargain.

The report shows that other cities were bidding for the works, and the company stood ready to locate where the best offer was made, other conditions being desirable. The Council of Toronto by a committee put in its bid, and a contract was closed April 10, 1893. By this contract, a long and very explicit one, we learn that the city gave 100 acres of land that needed filling. The company wished the city to fill five acres of the site, but to place the council refused to do so, as also to place piling and concrete for machinery foundations. But the city did agree to give the company $75,000 for filling and piling purposes, the company to fill fifty acres for that sum and to use the money for no other purpose.

The company binds itself to do the work, establish the plant, and have the furnaces in operation by January 1, 1894, and to employ not less than seventy-five men continuously in operating the works.

The agreement included exemption of the capital and property of the company from taxation. The works to be erected to cost, on estimate, $500,000 in excess of the filling and piling for foundations, etc., and the city to construct certain roads and bridges. It was also expressed as an estimate that besides the seventy-five men to be employed in the works as a minimum number, from 700 to 800 will be employed in mines and forests to supply the mills with material.

The council ratified this agreement with the proviso only that it shall not be effectual for any purpose unless approved by a vote of the people "entitled to vote on money-by-laws."

These two examples of the methods of inducing location of large capitalized industries sufficiently illustrates the Toronto plan. Evidently the people of that city, as represented in Municipal Council, see in the labor employed and money put out in erecting works worth $500,000, that will, when completed, engage steadily seventy-five skilled workmen at the lowest, and probably twice or thrice that number in time; and in the added importance given to the city and the additional trade created and property values enhanced, full reward for giving outright 100 acres of land, $75,000 cash, exemption from taxation and the expense of road and bridge building.

In other words, Toronto believes, evidently, that property is made valuable in a city by industrial activity and by diversity of industries. Such a scheme as is possible under the Canadian laws is impossible in most of the United States by like methods, because exemption from taxation is not permitted, as a rule. But by other methods, where the conditions are favorable, such a scheme is possible.

So it comes to this, that inducement for location of industrial plants is recognized as legitimate and business-like through direct aid given by communities, the methods of extending the aid differing under different governments.

Since the above was written the news gives information that the city of Hamilton, at the upper end of Lake Ontario, outside Toronto, and that the steel company referred to withdrew its offer to Toronto and accepted that of Hamilton.

DIFFERING CONDITIONS.

The Calaveras Prospect, commencing the call for the State Road Convention, says:

The actual work of road building, however, must remain with the smaller divisions of the Government. Roads that would be excellent in California or Sacramento counties would be of little use in Calaveras. The conditions are entirely different here. The heavy grades and bad soil make it a different plan of construction altogether from the roads in that country. We have at hand the best of material, and the roads now proposed and constructed would cost little for repairs. Had this country twenty years ago issued its bonds for $100,000,000 and with the money built, in a scientific and thorough manner, good roads on all of its main traveled thoroughfares, we would today have something to show for it, and the burden on the taxpayer would have been no heavier than now. Our roads have cost us on an average about $11,000 a year, and are no better than they were twenty years ago, or they were not at all this year.

It is precisely because conditions differ, or our contemporary states, that such a convention as that called is needed. It is necessary to educate the people upon the different methods of economic road building under different conditions, and this can best be done by comparing these conditions, and influencing legislation to meet them, while at the same time instructing people how to proceed under such laws as we have, with a view to securing the best results.

But what is the Democratic party to do with its national platform staring it in the face with a demand for a repeal of the Tax Act? What is it going to say to the people; how is it to steer clear of the snag it has placed in midstream with shallow waters on either side? The right thing, the manly thing to do, is to confess error and frankly declare that the policy of the party in this respect has been error. Such a course will inspire respect, while any attempt to excuse or defend the bank note plank will be confession of weakness.

DURING the trial of Lizzie Borden the RECORD-UNION refrained from comment upon the case, though believing her to be the victim of circumstances and of a theory of the police. The jury which tried her has wisely reached a conclusion that the woman is innocent. We believe that indeed her innocence would long ago have been conceded but for the fact that the police started out with assumption of her guilt and built their case around that, instead of making discovery of the truth the one aim of their labor.

The President has exercised the discretionary power given him by Congress and placed all Indian Agencies under the control of the War Department. This should have been done years ago. The order will effectually bar scandalous administration of the agencies and will not at all interfere with the educational policy or with the new method of giving the Indians land in severalty, thus breaking up the tribal relation so far as the power of the chiefs is concerned.

The California building at the World's Fair has been formally dedicated, Governor Markham receiving the keys and accepting the building for the State. It is very gratifying to learn from authoritative sources that since the exhibits have been placed the California special exposition is a credit to the State, attracts great attention and commands the warmest praise.

The Oakland Council has set aside $15,000, as advised by the Board of Health, to erect a garbage crematory of a sufficient number of furnaces to dispose of garbage for a population of 50,000 people. It has added $3,000 for the purchase of a site. Half of an equal sum will provide a crematory sufficient for this city for some years. The question is, will the order be made?
