A WORD TO BUSINESS MEN. This city will soon be full of solicitors from San Francisco "working the town," as the saying goes, for advertising for special editions of Midwinter Fair newspapers, dailies and weeklies, and a goodly lot of other stripes published in San Francisco.

It is simple justice, plain truth and common sense to say to the business men of Sacramento that the local press of their city is fully equal to the needs of the time in legitimate advertising, and in no other should any business man engage.

The Sacramento press claims of right the patronage of home business men for any and all Midwinter Fair special editions or other advertising. The press of this city is as capable as that of any other city to present any and all claims of Sacramento at the coming fair.

The newspapers of Sacramento spend their money here; just so far as the city is able to meet the demand they buy their supplies here. They are large employers of labor—labor that makes every vital interest of the city its own, and that first and last is loyal to the city of its home.

They have a right to demand, therefore, that they shall not be robbed of their right, in order to enrich the press of another city and to fill the purses of men who get up schemes in the way of special newspaper editions, fugitive sheets, books, circulars and the like, to say nothing of maps with advertising margins, charts and a whole crop of sidishow advertising dodges that follow in the wake of every fair.

There is another thing our business men should consider when the foreign newspaper solicitor puts in an appearance, and that is that the local press is a constant and tireless advocate of local interests. A special or regular edition of the press of a city is anywhere in itself an advertisement for the city.

One of the sharpest and most extensive advertisers the world has known, once said: "Show me the press of a city, and let me look over its advertising, local and news papers, and I will tell you all about the place and its people, and precisely how they are to be rated." And that man was very close to a great truth.

We know that we reflect the sentiment of the best business men of the city when we say that nineteen-twentieths of all the money spent by our citizens in special edition advertising in foreign papers, whether regularly of the press or spasmodic sheets gotten up for the hour, has been thrown away. We recall one instance where a so-called newspaper in San Francisco bid this city to the tune of $2,000 for advertising in a special edition to be widely circulated, and not a single copy of the concern was ever reported as having been seen, outside of a few cast into the gutters and upon the sidewalks.

There will be a deal of chatter rattled into the ears of advertisers about immense editions, tons of sheets to be distributed, boundless circulation, and the like, in the interest of the foreign papers, and half of the stories can be taken as untrue; but, if all true, they cut no figure in the case. In fact, the sensible person who finds a city deserting, for foreign advertising mediums of the character indicated, its own press, to which it looks for advocacy, promotion of local interests and watchfulness over the common affairs of the community, is justified in forming a low estimate of the place that adopts such methods.

We repeat, the city is about to be beset with the foreign advertising solicitor, and business houses are to be asked to put the money they usually expend in legitimate home journals into fugitive editions of sheets of another city for boom or side-show purposes. Against such solicitation the local press enters its protest, trusts to its patrons to rebuke these solicitors as is deserved, and declares that it is equal to better and more reliable and paying service to Sacramento for all Midwinter or State Fair advertising, by regular or special editions, than any foreign paper possibly can be.

WHAT IS CHEAPEST FOOD? Professor Atwater, in the Forum, declares that science knows that it is the poor man's money that is most wasted in the purchase of food. That is, he who ought to save most and have the most nutritious food, actually pays most and gets least. Thus, the poor man's food ought to be the best cooked and the most strengthening, but, as a rule, it is worst cooked and is least nutritive.

The Massachusetts Bureau of Labor Statistics reports that the inquiry of the bureau proves unequivocally that the rich buy the cheapest cuts from butchers, and the poor the highest priced, thereby the rich get the best meat and pay least for it. The testimony is that the most fastidious are those who are least able to pay. The same testimony comes from New York and other great market centers.

Food costs more than clothing and shelter, but we give less attention to it than to either of the others. We look sharp to see that a coat fits, or that a roof does not leak, but we are careless as to the nutritive qualities of the food we buy. The reason is that people know so little about these nutritive values.

How many know that there is more nutritive quality in a pound of wheat or flour than in seven pounds of oysters? The latter are the most "filling," but the former will longer and better sustain life. There is as much that goes to sustain life and build up wasting tissue in five cents' worth of beans or codfish as in half a dollar's worth of tenderloin steak, salmon or lobster, says Professor Atwater.

Very largely it is true that the best groceries, the finest goods, the most costly brands, are very far from being so wholesome and strength and happiness giving as the coarser and cheaper grades. In steaks round steak is valuable as a contributor of strength compared to tenderloin and porterhouse, as four is to one. Seven and a half cents' worth of bread gives to the consumer more protein and more calories of energy than thirty cents' worth of oysters. Sirloin beef gives but sixty-eight and in some cases eighty-six protein grams and from 870 to 1,170 calories of energy, while beef neck at six to eight cents a pound gives no less than 215 protein grams and 2,765 calories of energy. Salt cod is double the energy value of fresh salmon, and the hen's egg is thrice as strength producing as is the oyster.

Professor Atwater is of the opinion that about one-sixth of all the food we purchase is absolutely wasted; that is, one day's food for the family out of every six days food is squandered through un-economic methods.

But we cannot enter, in this article, into the reasons he advances in support of that statement. We may say, however, that the waste is not all in casting aside food, nor in cooking, but is partly in the selection of food that is not of the most energy-producing quality. Not that there need be any limitation whatever upon varieties of food, or tastes, but that in meeting the demand for variety we waste in selecting the brand. Then there is the needless waste due to un-economic cookery, etc.; the waste in improper storage, and in other ways.

It is well for all the people to ask themselves: "Is Professor Atwater right when he declares, 'that a large body of the people in this country by their practice say to economize closely is beneath us. We do not want to live cheaply, but we want to live well.'" But in fact they are not only not living well but are doing that which reduces strength and limits comfort. But how shall these things be remedied among the people? By information pressed upon them; by experiments that will convince them; by proofs made that they can live cheaper and better at the same time.

The San Francisco press is very suspicious that the State Board of Equalization is plotting to do that city injury by raising the assessed values returned, without sufficient reason therefor. We have seen nothing that justifies belief that the board means to do anything more or less than its plain duty. We have had this complaining from San Francisco every year, and every time the metropolis has been cited to appear it has made a lame showing, consisting mainly of complaints that property in the interior is not assessed proportionately high with that of San Francisco. But in every case, as we recall the history of these matters, the metropolis has been found guilty of attempting to evade its just share of the burden of supporting the government of the State. The interior wishes no injustice done to San Francisco. Neither will it be content with undervaluations.

HELEN WATSON in the September Forum has a paper on the "Women's Excitement Over Women" in which there is much expression with which we cannot agree, but a good deal that merits commendation. For instance, she is to be approved when she protests against the sex-consciousness of the time, and charges her own sex with being the cause of it. And she is right, for she remarks there is no more striking evidence of it than the woman's exhibition at the Columbian Exposition. Why should there have been any such distinctive display? There is no men's exhibition; why should women themselves have created a distinction? If women had handiwork to exhibit, why not let it take its place in its class regardless of the sex of the producer? Helen Watson is right, the women producers of to-day are the victims of an acute and deplorable sex-consciousness.

EMMA GOLDMAN has reached her rope's length at last, and is under arrest for inciting to riot. She declares that she is an anarchist and opposed to all forms of government. In this free land Emma is privileged to say just as often as she chooses, but the moment she attempts to create breaches of the peace, the offended law treats her precisely as it does any other offender against the statutes provided to restrain the vicious and punish the guilty. Emma will not gain anything by the attempt to pose as a martyr. She is neither a hero nor has she the earmarks of one. The country can spare all of her kind. We endure them now—but how much longer shall we do so?
