The Wheat Market Shows a Declining Tendency at San Francisco.

The Demand for Feed Purposes of Barley Continues Light and Slow—Improvement in Oats.

SAN FRANCISCO, Sept. 19th. The wheat market today showed declining tendency, with slightly lower asking prices. No. 1 shipping wheat is quotable at $1.05 per cwt, with $1.01 for choice, the latter class of stock. Millers are not disposed to pay over $1.10 per cwt for the better kind of milling wheat, but transactions are few at this or any other figure, as there is more or less stock ahead for the mills to work on. The demand for feed purposes of barley continues light and slow, with stocks in excess of immediate requirements, causing easy feeling in values. The inquiry for brewing barley for shipment has fallen off materially, though prices are somewhat steadily maintained, because stocks are not large, especially of a really choice article. Supplies of oats are increasing, but the demand is also improving, and the market is beginning to show more activity in consequence. Prices are not buoyant, but there is a steady feeling to the situation and no immediate decline in quotations is considered.

Referring to Hops, the San Francisco Prices Current says: "The local market is ruling dull, and does not show any signs of recovery. The strength of deliveries on contracts are doubtless giving most dealers and shippers about the same impression. The market is expected to be close on to 50,000 bales, and of excellent quality; the Washington crop probably will be less than 50,000 bales. Oregon yield about 25,000 bales."

The vegetable market opened quiet this morning with prices steady. Potatoes are weak at quotations. Onions are firm. Corn is in light supply and the demand is not particularly active. The movement in fresh fruit is rather slow. Prices are unchanged, with the exception of a firmer tone in cranberries. Apples, peaches and pears are plentiful. There is little demand for wine grapes.

The market for dairy produce is generally firm. Fresh butter is firm, especially Creamery, which sold up as high as 30 cents. The egg market held up well, and prices are cleaning up well. Cheese is unchanged.

The poultry market is dull with a light demand and prices steady. California receipts are light.
