

THE PULLMAN CAR COMPANY'S KICK.

San Francisco and San Mateo County's Protest.

Tulare County Presents Its Plea and Asks the Equalizers to be as Lenient as Possible.

Yesterday morning W. Clayton, representing the Receiver of the San Francisco and San Mateo Railway Company, addressed the State Board of Equalization on the depreciation of value in the property of the road.

The stock, he said, was not worth one cent on the dollar, but last year's assessment of $125,000 was raised by the board this year to $150,000.

The bonds for $1,000,000 are a first lien on the property, and are advanced $400,000 on them at fifty cents on the dollar.

The Pullman Company. J. P. Meehan, agent for the Pullman Car Company, took the next turn. He did not see why the board had raised the assessment $15,000 this year on cars that were older and nearly worn out than they were last year.

The company had expended two and a half millions in cars for the anticipated World's Fair travel, and 400 of them were lying idle in Chicago at the time of the strike.

Mr. Colgan asked if the company had reduced its price for sleeping arrangements on account of the depreciation in business and hard times, and Mr. Meehan did not remember ever hearing that it had.

Beamer wanted to know if the rates had ever been reduced to correspond with the deterioration of property, and Meehan answered that he had never heard of any such reduction. Rates had been reduced in the East to meet competition.

There were the tourist cars, he said, which were a great accommodation to the traveling public. Before they were introduced there was no extra charge made for emigrant cars. The Pullman Company fitted them with extra bedding and of course a charge is now made for them.

Colgan said the tourist cars are assessed at $4,000 each, which is about one-fourth of their value.

The board then took a recess till afternoon.

Tulare County Speaks. Tulare County had its inning yesterday afternoon, being represented by Assessor Alexander Gilman, Supervisor T. Waddie and Philip Haner of Forterville.

Mr. Gilman, in his address to the county did not want to plead poverty the times had been so bad that property had depreciated so much that the county assessment roll had been reduced.

What raising has ceased to be profitable and many growers have been forced to abandon it, in some instances having to abandon their farms.

Beamer pulled out his little note book and asked about this place and the other. He found that in some portions of the county orchards had been cut out and the alkali land were dying, although they grow thrifflily at first.

Morehouse, when arbitrary assessments were spoken of, stated that a few years ago the board ascertained that the Assessor had assessed the land in some residents at $3 per acre and that of residents at $2.50.

He thought that such a proceeding was outrageous and anyone doing so should be "kicked."

Gilman gave a description of various parcels of land on which Beamer asked questions, and gave reasons why the assessment had been reduced.

There is one said Mr. Beamer. "A Californian always thinks that the place where he lives is the best in the creation."

"Except when he comes before this board," said Mr. Moorehouse, and the delegation gratefully acknowledged the oom.

VULNERARY CLOVER. Its Resistant Properties in Times of Drought.

W. A. Sanders of Redley, Cal., writes to the Record-Union concerning what is known as "vulnerary clover," prefaced by the following paragraph from The Practical Farmer's Paris correspondence:

"What is known as 'vulnerary clover' (Anthyllus vulneraria) has been a golden opinion for the manner in which it came triumphantly through the drought of 1888. It had always a reputation for resisting dry seasons."

The clover remained close and uniform and maintained a thick bloom. After affording excellent cuttings during two years, in succession, the field can still be grown for three or four years.

However, an annual clover is more and more being preferred by the clover farmers, but of course that will depend on local conditions. The vulnerary ought to be cut only when in full flower; the aftermath consists of its pastures for sheep—but must not be too closely fed down, if a good crop is required for the following season. It succeeds well after a root crop and may be profitably followed by a cereal. It may be sown with autumn rye or spring oats and at the rate of ten to thirteen pounds per acre.

The vulnerary has the advantage to succeed where the other clovers and lucerne fail. If seed is intended to be grown, that from the first year's crop will prove the slendest, but the seed gathered when the pods display a deep or a black-green color."

The plant referred to in the above is a native of England, and is commonly known as "kidney vetch." The leaves are large, of bluish tint, hairy, with terminal leaflet largest. The flowers are usually yellow, and are crowded in heads, commonly disposed in pairs. I have often thought of it from its habit of growing only on the highest and driest ridges in its native Britain, that it might be a valuable addition to our California forage plants. The seed of this vetch is a spontaneous would lead to the same conclusion.

Another species of the same (Anthyllus Boras Jones), a native of Spain and of shrub-like growth, might be of value here. When well pruned it makes a beautiful shrub. It has been grown as an ornamental shrub in Southern Europe for centuries. Pliny speaks of its beauty, and adds that it dislikes water.

J. F. BOHN'S DAMAGING ADMISSION.

He Supported a Woman Down in Oakland, But Could Not Pay for the Maintenance of His Wife and Child Here.

On December 8, 1891, George Bohn brought suit for divorce against John F. Bohn, a carpenter, and the court ordered him to pay her alimony at the rate of $30 per month.

After Bohn was served with the summons in the case he went to Oakland, and after remaining there awhile was arrested on a charge of bigamy. Somehow the charge was not pushed, and he escaped.

Nearly all the time he was absent from this city he has been, according to his own admission, lived in open adultery with a woman in Oakland, and as a result of their relations a child was born to them.

About three weeks ago Superior Judge Johnson adjudged Bohn guilty of contempt, for not having obeyed the order of the court to pay his wife the alimony, and he was brought up from San Francisco and lodged in the county jail.

Yesterday C. W. Baker petitioned Judge Johnson for Bohn's release on the ground that he never received any notice that he was required to pay the alimony. Bohn also claimed that he engaged a lawyer to defend him, but that he was unable to pay for the support of his wife and child.

When on the stand yesterday Bohn was asked by Hiram W. Johnson, Mrs. Bohn's attorney, if he intended to pay his wife anything for the support of herself and child.

Bohn replied that he never left his wife and if she was willing to live with him again he would do so.

This last remark of Bohn's caused Attorney Johnson to give him a severe rebuke, saying that he was unable to pay anything for the support of his wife and child, but if given an opportunity he would endeavor to do so.

"But you are unable to support another woman in Oakland during the time you were sick," retorted Attorney Johnson.

Bohn did not heed Johnson's remark, but kept on giving excuses for not complying with the order of the court to pay the alimony.

Judge Johnson then said that there was no testimony to show that Bohn had allowed to go he would give a stipend ever month for the support of his family.

At this juncture the support of his wife and child, he should be compelled to go to work, and therefore he was unable to pay anything for the support of his wife and child, but if given an opportunity he would endeavor to do so.

Bohn asked the court to make an order allowing him to see his child, and that request being granted, a strong protest from the wife's attorney.

Judge Johnson said he would make the order, and addressing Bohn, remarked: "I have the utmost confidence in you. You are a man; for a woman to live with you, I would not expect a woman to live with you, after you had lived in such a manner."

Bohn was then discharged.
