

PHRENOLOGICAL SCIENCE.

Dr. W. W. Case Exemplified It to His Hearers Last Night.

An Entertaining and Instructive Lecture on the Study of Human Nature.

A fair-sized audience, despite the heat, attended the lecture of Rev. W. W. Case, D. D., pastor of the Howard-street Methodist Church, San Francisco, which was given last night at the Sixth-street Methodist Church.

The doctor is an easy and interesting speaker who, without oratorical effort, drives plain truths home with convincing statement that seems to need no argument to give it force.

He said he had no apology to make for appearing before the audience lecturing on a subject regarded by many as a humbug.

The science is yet in its infancy, although there are well equipped laboratories for the study of psychology and earnest and persistent students always at work.

It took many years for the Copernican system to receive broad recognition, but it was finally accepted.

The temperaments that he should speak of, first, he should divide into three branches—the vital, the motive, and the mental.

The vital temperament is the round one, round face, round body and the nature that likes good living.

The motive temperament is symbolized by the face that is broad at the top and narrows down to the bottom.

The mental temperament is symbolized by the face that is broad at the top and narrows down to the bottom.

The old divisions are the bilious, the sanguine, the plethoric and the melancholic.

The lecturer then proceeded to illustrate from a phrenological chart, and said that those who say they believe in phrenology, but not in phrenology, give themselves away.

The fine regular featured man may have a straight up-and-down head behind, and the girls might better marry a lamp-post, for he lacks love of home, amateness and all the domestic virtues.

He illustrated by portraits of well-known people living and dead the relation of the various organs and bumps of the skull to their characters.

He characterized McKinley as combining in himself in a very large degree the vital, motive and mental temperaments.

He caused the lights turned down and exhibited a skull that he said belonged to a woman who was once one of the most notorious denizens of the San Francisco dives.

He characterized the phrenological development of his heads, and judging from the expressions of approval from their acquaintances in the audience, came very close to the truth.

INTERVIEWED WASHINGTON.

How a Brave Little Boy Met the Great Commander.

In the July "St. Nicholas" Sara King Wiley has a romance of the American Revolution, entitled "Maurice and His Father." A brave little English lad is separated from his father and falls into the hands of the Americans.

Maurice was informed that General Washington was showing the works to General Lafayette, and his heart began to flutter and thump within him.

Barney was sitting beside him, looking at his master with bright and loving eyes, his little black nose quivering.

"Barney," said the boy, "we're afraid, but we're not going to stop if we are." And, turning up his dog, he took his way, through the rustling leaves that lay like heaps of gold, towards the house which one of the soldiers, from whom Maurice ventured to ask for directions, had pointed out to him.

"Yes, General Washington is there, and alone," he was told.

"Sure, no, ye little boy," said the Irish soldier. "It's worse out the poor gentleman is, already, and it's meself wouldn't bother with all them jabbering 'Frinchman'."

Maurice was desperate. "Oh, please," he said. "Beg, Barney; ye beg, too."

"The little dog sat up at once with drooping paws.

"Sure, me own name's Barney. And is your dog's name O'Reilly, too?" said the soldier.

"Oh, if he is your namesake," exclaimed Maurice, "you must let him go in!" Maurice held him while I wait Jackson, Jenny June, Gall Hamilton, Grace Greenwood and many others whose portraits he showed.

He caused the lights turned down and exhibited a skull that he said belonged to a woman who was once one of the most notorious denizens of the San Francisco dives.

He characterized the phrenological development of his heads, and judging from the expressions of approval from their acquaintances in the audience, came very close to the truth.

prompted by curiosity, the river rat is seen in his native state.

The habits of the Levee, although of all races and shades of color, are unmistakably of the same genius.

There is no moral code on the Levee, and as to the legal code, it is observed to the extent of not being caught violating by the policeman on the beat.

For the rest the principles of life consist principally in living with as little manual labor as possible and surrounding as much liquid poison as they can by any means acquire.—St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

Prelates at Reparte.

There was an amusing episode at the commencement exercises of the Georgetown University on the 23d. Archbishop Ryan of Philadelphia delivered an eloquent address on "Civil and Religious Liberty."

The audience smiled audibly and looked at Archbishop Ryan. The latter arose when Cardinal Gibbons had concluded. "I feel that the words of Cardinal Gibbons call for some little explanation on my part," he said.

"I'll see," said the soldier, and he stepped within, and returning said: "Go on."

Maurice yielded up Barney and stepped in to the hall, went along it, and paused just inside an open door. He was trembling. A voice said: "What is your errand?"—a voice even, grave and rather severe.

Maurice raised his eyes. Just before the fireplace stood the great commander; to the boy's excited thought he seemed even larger than he was.

Washington's hands were behind his back, his handsome head bent a little forward.

"What is your errand, my lad?" said he again, with a note of command in the tone.

"Oh, my father—my father!" he said. "I have been lost from him so very long!"

Something in the thrilling child's voice, something in the piteous and earnest expression of the face went straight to the warm heart that the General carried beneath his calm exterior.

"My poor child!" This was too much. Maurice had borne bravely the long strain of waiting, the repeated disappointments, but the unexpected sympathy broke down his self-possession.

Maurice choked down his sobs and told his story. At his father's name the General rose quickly.

"Colonel Terraine's son! Why, then, your father was here a short time ago—he may be up at the new house."

Maurice forgot even the great chief and sprang for the door. But Washington caught him by the arm.

"My dear boy—he does not know—I will go."

Maurice stood still in the center of the room, and pressed his hands hard together. The General went out, and up stairs; it seemed to Maurice that he stepped very slowly.

Colonel Terraine sat in an upstairs room writing; he laid down his pen and rose as the General entered.

"Colonel," said Washington, "I have some wonderful news for you." He pushed the officer took a step forward and opened his lips, but did not speak.

"Come down stairs with me," continued the General slowly, "and remember as you go that passage in the Scriptures, 'And the father said, Let us be merry, for this my son.'"—Colonel Terraine caught the back of a chair—"For this my son—" went on the sweet, grave voice, "was dead, and is alive again; he was lost and is found."

Colonel Terraine stood an instant with wide, questioning eyes; then he rushed through the doorway and down stairs. The General followed him quickly.

There was a loud cry as the Colonel entered the room and Maurice sprang into his father's arms. General Washington closed the door and stood guard over it himself. Barney, having escaped from the soldier, tore in, and the General stooped from his great height to pat the little dog. If Barney had been a man he would have seen that there were tears in the bright blue eyes.

LIFE ALONG THE LEVEE.

Poverty and Degradation Among the Habitués of All Races.

A stroll along the river front from the Eads Bridge to Poplar street is calculated to raise doubts of the truth of the dogma that God made man in His own image. It is also calculated to raise doubts as to the wisdom of sending missionaries to the far-off heathen when the heathen flourishes apace within sound of scores of church bells.

It is enough to raise a reasonable doubt as to whether or not all men have souls. Many of the denizens of the Levee district are little higher in their mode of life or thoughts than the lower animals. They have the gift of speech, truly, but it is used chiefly in profanity, obscenity, indecency, a mere vehemence for the expression of the base thoughts their brains are alone capable of conceiving.

For the rest, they are housed worse and fed worse than the horse or dog, and are less cleanly than most animals in their wild state.

All the big river towns on the great waterways have their Levee districts, and all present, in greater or less degree, the same condition of poverty, squalor and degradation. As the largest city on the greatest of rivers, the St. Louis Levee leads all the others. It has always had a reputation for toughness. It does not improve as time passes.

Sunday is the best time to study the Levee denizen. On week days wagons laden with commerce for shipment by river, clerks, well-dressed steamboat passengers of both sexes, men of all classes have business on the Levee, and the scene is not so unmixt. But on Sunday when no one having no business on the Levee goes there, save an occasional stroller,
