

AN IMPORTANT MATTER.
Republicans Should Stand by Their Congressional Nominees.
 (From the Placer Republican.)
 The Congressional candidate of the Republican party for the Second District enjoys the distinction of being the first member of the House from the Pacific Coast to "break the ice," which, as a rule, freezes over a first term in Congress. Mr. Johnson in fact, took a position and received recognition in the House that a Congressman in his first term is generally denied.
 This is a reason, if there were no other, why he should be returned. He was the most useful and prominent first term member we ever had, getting to the front, securing the floor and catching the Speaker's eye, which is usually an impossibility for the Congressman in his first term. How much more useful he will be to the people, therefore, in a second term. The very fact of his constituents returning him will command for him a place and distinction impossible to a new and untried man.
 It is a fact worthy of more than passing notice that Mr. Johnson's meetings throughout the district have been remarkable for their size, the importance they have assumed and the interest taken in them by the people. Everywhere he has had the profound attention of the electors of the counties. They have not been silent listeners by any means, but have held, so to speak, conferences with Mr. Johnson in the open, asking him questions by his invitation or of their own accord, and calmly exchanging views with him. They have, in short, indicated that they are intelligent upon the needs of the district and the course of Mr. Johnson in the House, and have applauded his utterances and approved his report of his work, emphatically.
 We do not anticipate a small, but a very large majority for the Republican candidate, but this fact should not cause any relaxation of energetic work in his behalf. It is not more Mr. Johnson and the State, but the upholding of the principles which underlie the Republican contention, namely, that protection to California productive and industrial interests must be reasserted and made tangible through the tariff legislation of Congress; that the Republican platform shall be vindicated in its declaration for a stable and safe financial system, recognizing both gold and silver, and demanding the enlargement of the volume of the latter, without driving the former out of the country and American trade channels.
 An exceedingly large and overwhelming majority for the Republican ticket in the Second District means also the strengthening of the arms of all champions of protection in Congress. It means the placing behind William McKinley a strong working force, emphasized by an equally strong majority expression of the people from whose will all government springs.
 The same may be said of every Congressional district in the State—there should be great majorities for the party candidate, that California may be placed squarely and unequivocally in the protection, prosperity and sound money column that is headed and led by William McKinley.
