

GOOD CALIFORNIA TOBACCO.

It is Now Successfully Grown in San Diego.

An Interesting Report on the Subject to the State Board of Trade.

The following report has been filed with the California State Board of Trade: Gentlemen: We, your committee appointed to inquire into the merits of certain California tobacco grown extensively by J. D. Culp at San Felipe, Santa Clara County, and to give an opinion as to the feasibility of manufacturing the same into cigars and other merchantable products, beg leave to report as follows:

We find on a casual examination of the tobacco industry in the United States that it is one of great magnitude, and that in sections where tobacco is grown it produces more in value to the acre and is generally more profitable to the planter than almost any other staple yield.

The tobacco yield of the United States is something like 500,000,000 pounds per annum, which, one year with another, brings on an average, including all the varieties and qualities, about 7 cents per pound, or a total of $35,000,000. In addition to this large production, the United States imports something like $16,000,000 worth of tobacco and tobacco products each year. We submit these figures to show the importance of the industry in this country, and incidentally to indicate what may be done in California when it once shall be satisfactorily demonstrated that this State possesses in its soil and climatic conditions all the requirements for the production of a superior quality of this important staple.

As a rule, the tobacco crop in other States is not certain, but is often attended with total or partial failures. Too much or too little rain, windstorms, hail or frosts, which occur in Eastern and Southern States, are drawbacks to the success of the tobacco crop.

None of these elements prevail in California to such an extent or at such seasons as to render them items of danger. Here the season is long and dry and warm, enabling the planter to count with certainty on a crop each year.

Again, the use of fertilizers in most of the tobacco producing localities of the United States is an item of considerable expense, while here but little fertilizing is required.

As indicating the value of the tobacco crop per acre as compared with other staples, it is only necessary to point to the fact that the California wheat crop of 1895, which amounted to little less than $20,000,000, was grown on 2,000,000 acres of land, while the entire tobacco crop of the United States for the same year was grown on 700,000 acres of land.

Those best advised on the subject claim that California has within her border over 1,000,000 acres of land suitable for the cultivation of high grade tobacco. When this area shall be utilized in growing tobacco, as in time it may be, the output of the State will aggregate more than the present total output of the United States. From such an industry on such a scale the advantages that would accrue are difficult to contemplate. Manufacturers would arise to work up the raw product in all centers of trade and population, and the laborers required in these factories would be legion. The railroads and other carriers would find increased business in freightage out of the State many tons of tobacco and tobacco products where they are now carrying in one ton. The farmer would receive a benefit that cannot be easily estimated. It is well known that choice tobacco lands in the Eastern and Southern States rent readily for $50 or more per acre per annum, and what is true in the East in regard to the value of land for the production of this staple would be more than true in regard to the same item in California.

The increase in the value of the product of the California farm would add to the value of that farm and result in a corresponding increase to the assessment roll. The increased number of factories in cities and towns would give an impetus to all lines of business and send forward the value of all city and town property. San Francisco would become the rival of New York as a cigar manufacturing center, and its output of cigars and smoking tobacco would surpass the output in these goods of Richmond or St. Louis.

To accomplish all this it needs but to be demonstrated to the satisfaction of men of enterprise and capital that California can grow a superior quality of tobacco. We believe it can. Our investigation of the subject convinces us of this important fact. We know from most experiments made in this State in growing tobacco that the product when finally turned has been too rank a strong for manufacturing purposes, but these difficulties seem to have been entirely overcome in the product from San Felipe. Success with Mr. Culp, the San Felipe grower, seems to have long passed the experimental line.

There would seem, therefore, no better time to put this tobacco on the market strictly on its merits than at present. Its superiority would soon be recognized, and the consuming world would wake up to the gratifying fact that good tobacco can be obtained even though devastating wars should destroy the last pound of the Cuban crop. The fact would focus attention on California, and this State in consequence would attract the eager interest of all tobacco-growers and manufacturers; while the manufacturers of the San Felipe product would find a demand for their goods which the present supply of raw product would not enable them to fill.

Being pioneers in the establishment of the merits of the California goods, they would be insured an industry that would grow with the growth of the product, be as lasting as time and profitable possibly beyond computation. That there is a field inviting such an enterprise is evidenced from the fact that there are now manufactured in the First Revenue District of California alone something like 62,000,000 cigars per annum, and practically all from tobacco grown outside of this State.

HOW IT HAPPENED.

Why Steve Boyer Trundled Emil Wenzel in a Wheelbarrow.

Steve Boyer believed that Bryan would be elected to the Presidency. He believed in Jones of Arkansas—and the bulletins that Jones gave to the press—and was willing to back up his belief in Jones' predictions of success for Bryan. On the contrary, Emil Wenzel was not willing to take Jones' figures for anything like their face value. Intimated that Jones was talking through his hat and that Bryan did not stand the ghost of a chance, Bryan's case was "pied," he said, and McKinley would win out with daylight behind his lead.

Now Boyer and Wenzel were friends, and in talking the matter over they failed to agree. Wenzel contended that Jones of Arkansas was a stupid ass, and Boyer asserted that Mark Hanna didn't know where he was at.

"I'll wheel you in a barrow," said Wenzel, "from Sixth and J to Twentieth and M streets if Bryan gets there!" "And I'll wheel you over the same ground," replied Boyer, "and throw in a banquet for our friends if McKinley knows he's alive after election day!"

And so it was settled, but alas! for Jones' slate and Boyer's confidence in Jones' veracity, Bryan is heard of no more—just a few lines during the past week saying he had gone hunting—and Wenzel had won.

Then it was that Boyer hustled around and borrowed a wheelbarrow from a contractor and informed Wenzel that he might fix the date for the circus. Wenzel consulted with his friends and pitched upon last evening, the start to be made at 8 o'clock. This was agreeable to Boyer, and the friends of the victor and the vanquished laid their heads together to make the matter the swell event of the season.

To begin with John Hermann was selected to act as Grand Marshal of the occasion, and behind him came a carriage containing a half-dozen "rooters," who made noise in abundance. Then followed a drum corps and next in line came Wenzel seated in the wheelbarrow, which was draped with the national colors. On his head he wore a high white campaign hat and in his hand was the proverbial new broom, suggesting a "clean sweep."

"Behind the principal actors came thirty torch-bearers, selected for their ability to march through the slush, rather than for party affiliations, and so the wagger was won and paid. Several stops were made on the road to secure refreshments and allow Boyer to get a fresh grip on his wind, but the journey was finished at last, and then both parties and their retainers partook of the bounteous banquet spread for them.

Throughout the line of march the streets were crowded and cheers went up both for the dignity of the victor and the pluck of the vanquished, who as he neared Fifteenth street, and no station in sight, was heard to mutter "D—n Jones!"

THE WEATHER.

A General Rainfall Throughout the Sacramento Valley. The Weather Bureau reports show the highest and lowest temperatures yesterday to have been 53 and 54 degrees, with brisk to fresh southwest winds and partly cloudy weather prevailing. The rainfall during the storm was .20 of an inch, making 1.42 inches for the season, as against 2.13 inches to the same date last year.

On Monday night the rainfall throughout the Sacramento Valley was quite heavy, also along the foothills and in the mountains, but at the Summit there was a fall of two inches of snow. Last evening there was a decided drop in the temperature from here northward, and the outlook was for clear and cold weather to-day. It was snowing again at the Summit yesterday, with rain at the stations lower down, but the snow soon turned into rain. The Oregon express was sixteen hours late on account of a washout near Ashland, but no other trains were interfered with. The heaviest rainfall reported for the twenty-four hours up to 7 o'clock yesterday morning was 2.20 inches, at Towles, Placer County, and the lightest, one-fifth of an inch, at Germantown, Colusa County.

Some Women jump at it. They're quick to see the advantages of Pearline, quick to economize and save, quick to adopt all the modern improvements that make life easier. And these quick women are the ones that are likely to use Pearline in the right way, and to find new uses for it, and get most out of it.

Some Women have to be driven to it. They wait until they can't stand the old-fashioned way of washing any longer. Then they get Pearline. But ten to one they use it for only part of the work, or use it some way of their own, or use something else with it—and don't get half the help they ought to.

Send it Back. Peddlers and some unscrupulous grocers will tell you "this is as good as" or "the same as Pearline." IT'S FALSE—Pearline is never peddled, and if your grocer sends you something in place of Pearline, be honest—send it back. 514 JAMES PYLE, New York.
