

PROPOSED MEMORIAL GROVE.

Ladies of the Grand Army Working Hard For It.

Members of the Grand Army Take It Up Enthusiastically All Over.

The committee appointed by the California Department of the Ladies of the Grand Army to arrange for the planting of a memorial grove in the Capitol Park here are losing no time, but are working very energetically to make a success of the project.

As stated in the "Record-Union" on Thursday, the idea was suggested by the planting of a colonial grove in Golden Gate Park, San Francisco, and was conceived by Mrs. Dr. Waggoner of this city, who promptly set to work to interest other members of the Edward Roby Circle in the matter.

At the first meeting of the circle after she had formed her plans she read to the members a statement, with suggestions of what she considered desirable. This statement is as follows:

Sister President and Ladies of the Circle: In a paper of Monday, the 6th of the current month, we read the interesting announcement that on Monday, the 15th inst., there would be a tree-planting in Golden Gate Park of thirteen beautiful trees, representing the thirteen original Colonial States.

The trees to be taken from historic battlefields and other notable places along the Atlantic Coast. "There will be," continues the article, "a white oak from the Saratoga battlefield. A plane tree from the birthplace of General Nathanael Green of Rhode Island, Massachusetts will send an arrow from the famous Charter Oak, Pennsylvania a tulip tree from Valley Forge camp ground. Other Colonial States will be represented, each by its special variety."

The sentiment is a magnificent one, far-reaching and educational in its conception. We can readily perceive the wisdom of its designers, for as the years come and go these memorial trees, with their springing buds, their fragrant flowers, their falling leaves, will each tell over and over again to coming generations the old, old story of the heroism and valor of our colonial and revolutionary ancestors. The promoters of this scheme, as you may have already devined, are the Daughters of the American Revolution. It is marvelous what valuable service to the country these patriotic ladies have rendered. They have saved from alien hands and the greed of the foreigner many sacred battlefields, and, from ruin and decay, many historic houses. They have established societies and their society historians are continually adding to the fund of literature telling incidents and happenings in the lives of our honored forefathers, during those stirring times incidents and facts that would have been utterly lost except for the wisdom of this and kindred societies.

In noting from time to time the splendid achievements of these ladies and daughters, the question has come to me again and again: Is there not something for us to do? Something to promote the interest and increase the usefulness of our order? Must we, the Ladies of the Grand Army of the Republic, who, like our country, are a voluntary sisters represent and commemorate the thrilling events, the heroes and heroines of a great war, a war for the defense and perpetuity of our Nation—shall we, who should be actuated by the same motives and inspired with the same patriotism, sit idly by with folded hands and silent pens? Enthusiastically I answer, "No!"

A thought has come to me—an inspiration, it may be—from the camping ground of our brave soldier dead. A plea, it may be, for recognition and an occasional remembrance. In this busy world of ours we think only of the living and their environments. We forget the sacrificed slain, who gave their lives so willingly for their country's defense.

The thought is this, that we, too, have an historic tree planting, that we secure, if a circle, then in the center of the memorial group I would set, if it could be obtained, a scion from that famous old McLean apple orchard at Appomattox, and there I would have it stand, sentinel-like, growing and thriving, booming and fading, from year to year, where emblematic of the ways by the unconditional surrender of the great contending army and the peace that was to come.

Do you grasp the idea? Do you comprehend the grandeur of the scheme? Think of it! Think of the object lesson it would be to future generations of school children as they roamed through the beautiful grounds surrounding our State Capitol, receiving, as they passed under the shadows of some silent messenger from Gettysburg, the wilderness, new incentives to the study of war history. Think of the honor that would be ours as these memorial trees grew and grew, pushing their strong limbs up and towards our far California sky, their branches, heavy with foliage, reaching out and into the California sunlight for ages and ages, bearing silent witness to the battles lost and won in the great Revolution.

ardon me, but as my own enthusiasm gathers strength, while contemplating this proposition, I feel assured of the willing aid of every circle in the department, and of the sanction and hearty co-operation of our department officers, and that Circle No. 2 will not lag hesitate in taking hold of this certainly laudable endeavor.

The Ladies of the circle were so pleased with the idea that they agreed to do all that lay in their power to carry out the suggestion, and the matter was urged by them before the authorities of the California Department, where it met with the same enthusiastic reception.

The twenty-one circles in California have all signified their intention to help a good cause along and will contribute toward the expense that will be incurred.

The matter has been brought up before several Grand Army posts and will be thoroughly discussed at the forthcoming campfire to be held here shortly, but wherever the matter has been broached to the comrades of the Grand Army it has met with the most favorable reception.

The committee is now corresponding with the Superintendents of the national cemeteries in order to obtain the trees, which are to be such as will thrive in this climate, and will include pines, cedars, spruce maples, elms, magnolias, chestnut oaks, black walnut and bay trees.

A meeting of the general committee will be held in San Francisco in the last week of this month, when a report is to be submitted, and it is hoped that some definite programme can be announced.

GOVERNOR'S PROCLAMATION

The Holiday Not Kept Except by the Courts and State Officials.

Its Announcement Came So Late It Would Have Interfered Badly With Business.

Yesterday was a holiday made so by proclamation of Governor Budd for the purpose of declaring that the people of the State should be glad that the funding bill was defeated in Congress.

But somehow the people did not seem to take much interest in the matter. There might have been pent-up feelings of rejoicing bubbling up spontaneously and tumultuously in their hearts, but if so, they successfully repressed the volcanic ebullitions and went quietly about their business just as if they had never heard of the funding bill, or if they had, thought it did not particularly concern them, anyhow.

The stores were all open as usual, and the proprietors were as attentive to turning the nimble six pence as they are on other days. The banks were all open in this city and transacted business as usual; the large wholesale houses did likewise, and even the railroad shops went right along with their work as if no proclamation of rejoicing for them had been issued and those in the various offices of the company did likewise.

There were four individuals who rejoiced over the proclamation. They were hobos and were glad that they were commended to cease from work and be joyful over their future exemption from the burdens they have had to bear for so many years. They showed their joy by stealing two kegs of beer from the Buffalo Brewery and proceeded to celebrate the holiday with it. But, alas, the police did not sympathize with them in their laudable ambition to carry out gubernatorial mandate, and their budding revelry was rudely nipped by their removal to the station, and they will explain tomorrow how they were misled by their enthusiasm.

The State offices were all closed yesterday, as were the various departments at the Courthouse, much to the annoyance of those who came from a distance on business connected with them. The offices of the City Clerk and Auditor were also closed, while those of the Mayor and Collector and others were going along as usual. There was no session of the Police Court, and offenders had to wait two days longer for adjudication on their offenses.

No one had anticipated that the proclamation would be issued as it was and no one was prepared for it. Many and diverse interests were therefore sufferers through it. People living in the large cities, where evening papers were issued, had a chance to read the proclamation had been issued, but it was too late when they learned of it to adjust their business calculations to it, and do on Friday what they would have done on Saturday.

A MEAT FAMINE. "Why," said a well-known proprietor of a butcher shop to a "Record-Union" reporter yesterday, "I knew nothing about the proclamation until I read it in the 'Record-Union' this morning. The rules of the Butchers' Union are very strict and impose a heavy fine on those who keep open on Sundays and holidays, even sell meat to customers. Suppose we had not opened our shops to-day and had refused to sell our customers meat until Monday morning. They did not know of the proclamation and had not supplied themselves for meat for two days, and what have mobbed us. Besides, we lay in a double stock of meat, and much of which might have spoiled. We all opened up as usual and supplied our customers."

A BANKER'S VIEWS. "The San Francisco banks are doing business to-day, as we learned by telegraph, and we all kept open too. Why, if we had not, there is no telling what business losses might have occurred. One man came from Lovelock, Nev., to-day, to deposit a large sum to meet an obligation. If he had found the bank closed it would perhaps resulted in his being sued and losing a considerable amount. Notes would not have been paid when due and many business concerns would have resulted in financial ruin to business men and firms.

"Many employers who bank their money through the week would have been left in the lurch when it came to paying their employees had the banks been closed to-day and the employees would have been badly incommoded. In fact, the inconvenience made by the lateness of the proclamation would have been quite general."

IN THE COURTS. As it is necessary that the proclamation of a holiday should be sent to the County Clerks of the various counties in the State, the ordinary mode of transmission would not do in this case on account of its being issued only a few hours in advance. It became necessary to telegraph it to the County Clerks to San Diego and from the Sierras to the sea. This was done and the State's bill for lightning transmission will be a round one.

A prominent lawyer said: "Of course, the machinery of the courts being stopped for the day, all cases set for hearing yesterday will have to be reset, entailing extra expense to litigants and extra time lost to witnesses. Cases that were partly heard and in some instances might have been concluded yesterday, were forced to go over till Monday, entailing more enforced absence from home and expense and inconvenience to witnesses and jurors and a corresponding increase in court costs. If some of the County Clerks in the most remote and not easily accessible counties, too, failed to receive the proclamation in time, a question might arise as to the legality of any action of the court taken yesterday and necessitate new trials. Indeed, as Saturday is a favorite day for trials in justices' courts in the rural districts, it is very probable that the result will be many reversals or orders for new trials in such courts. All this trouble would have been avoided if the date for the holiday had been further off."

MUST BEGIN AGAIN. In two instances the holiday called a halt in legal proceedings in this city. One was an assignee's sale of the property of an insolvent debtor and the other a sale of a large quantity of real estate by Thomas Rudech, executor of the estate of Morco Maina, deceased. They had been duly advertised according to law and the time for sale set, but the proclamation stopped the sale and all the matter will have to be gone over again.
