

CONDEMNED TO THE LOCK-UP.

The "Examiner" Men Remanded by the Supreme Court.

But at Last Accounts They Had Not Been Found by the Sheriff.

Andrew Lawrence and L. L. Levings, the "Examiner" men who were remanded to the custody of Sheriff Johnson by the Superior Court of this county for contempt in refusing to inform a Senate investigating committee from whom they obtained certain alleged information, and who were admitted to bail by the Supreme Court pending a hearing before that body yesterday on habeas corpus, were at last accounts last night evading the Sheriff of this county.

Sheriff Johnson made his return of the writ before the Supreme Court yesterday morning, and the defendants appeared in court with their counsel. Arguments were heard and submitted, and between 4 and 5 o'clock the court reconvened to render its decision.

Then the "Examiner" exponents of new journalism were not present, they being still on bail, and of course not in the Sheriff's custody.

The court made an order remanding them to the custody of the Sheriff, but they must have anticipated that result, for when Deputy Sheriff Hinters looked

THE MONSCH HEIRS.

Their Guardian Wishes to Sell a Part of Their Estate.

Isabella S. Monson, guardian of Wallace T. Monson, and Alfred C. W. Monson, minors, has applied to the Superior Court for permission to sell 3,186 acres of land of their estate. The petition sets forth that there is an indebtedness on the property of about $5,000, of which $2,500 is due the petitioner for family allowance, the rest being a mortgage. There is no other property of the estate available for the purpose of meeting these obligations, and that portion which it is desired to sell is pasture land.

A Little Knowledge. "The theater," remarked Mr. Blykins, impressively, "is a great educator; therefore, my son, I present you with the money with which to buy a ticket for the matinee."

Johnny Blykins looked delighted and said he was glad he had such a kind father.

"Remember," Mr. Blykins proceeded, "there is always something to be learned. We should strive to make even our leisure hours yield something more than mere diversion."

And as he could think of no good argument to the contrary, Johnny murmured "Yes, sir."

That evening Johnny stopped as he entered the yard and looked pensively at his father, who was putting a new piece of flooring in the front porch. His work caused him to bend far over, and Johnny's eye lit with inspiration. Going noiselessly around the side of the house, he returned with a barrel stave. He heaved it up and down two or three times so as to make his aim sure and then struck. The noise of the impact was great, but it was slight compared to the noise his father made as he leaped in the air with a yell and descended on his hands and feet like a gorilla. It was a wholly undignified spectacle, and the triumph faded out of the boy's face as he saw the fierce expression that his victim wore.

"You young scoundrel! You villain!" Mr. Blykins yelled. "You reprobate! You thief! You highlander! What do you mean by committing such a disgraceful attempt at paricide? You come with me, sir."

"You oughtn't to punish me for that," Johnny protested. "You told me that the theater was a great educator, and that I must remember to keep my eyes open and learn all I could. When the boy on the stage did that, everybody thought it was splendid and laughed and applauded."

"It's your own fault, Lemuel," said Johnny's mother, who had heard the noise and was standing in the dog. "I have always told you that matinees are not good for children. Now you'll admit the truth of what I said."

"I'll admit nothing of the kind. All I'll concede is that the stage needs elevation; and it needs it in a hurry, and a whole lot of it. Johnny, I shall not prohibit you from ever going to the theater again, but I will see to it that you don't see any play that is not strictly classical and with which I am not thoroughly familiar."—Washington Star.

TURPENTINE FARMING.

Great Tracts of Land Where the Industry is Carried On.

The Most Important and the Most Costly Work is the Building of the Still.

In this land of the sun bonnet, pecan and mighty stretches of pine forests, what is known as "turpentine farming" corresponds to the "grazing period" of the Pacific Coast country. There, during the grazing period, Spanish granges owned vast tracts of land, which they named great herds. It was the yearly yield of hides and tallow from these herds that netted their owners, who were not toolers, but for the most part gamblers, the princely incomes they enjoyed. There is no such large and easily obtained income from turpentine farming, but the acreage required for a turpentine farm or orchard is large, not less than 3,000 or 4,000 acres, and it is usually the initial step in opening large portions of the unsettled tracts of pine-woods country here in the South. In Florida, where the acreage of pine is large, the turpentine farmer is just beginning to open a tract. Unlike many of the farmers who till the soil, he is in every instance an expert. As it was with the pastoral patriarchs of Bible times, the turpentine farmer has no fixed abiding-place, but goes from one great pine forest to another, without reference to State or county lines. He is a nomad, with 100 or 200 strong, and his family.

The first thing in opening a turpentine farm, after securing the right to turpentine the trees for a certain period, usually about three years, is to locate the still. This done, the turpentine farmer and his workers proceed, "flat out" to pitch their tents. These tents are little yellow board houses with an outside chimney half as large as the structure itself, made of big pine sticks laid up crossbar fashion and generously daubed with clay. The chimneys in these quickly constructed, temporary abiding-places are the all important factor in a turpentine farm. First opened the greeting among the workers is not the ordinary inquiry in regard to health, but, "Mornin'! How is yo' chimney? Is it workin' all right?"

The most important work of opening a turpentine farm or orchard is building the still, and it is the most expensive. To build the still and open an orchard of, say 20,000 trees, costs not less than $7,500. Under ordinary circumstances, when turpentine and resin are bringing a fair price, this amount, together with a fair interest on the money put in, makes the first year. After that, whatever is made is clear gain, although the first year is always more profitable than any that follows, as the first crude gum that a tree yields, which is known as the "virgin dip," makes the fine white resin that brings the highest price, and also the best spirit of turpentine.

Most of the turpentine farmers in this part of the country are from South Carolina, which, in the language of the expert, has been "turpented" for years. Many of these farmers have grown old in the business, as have their black helpers.

Once the right to turpentine a tract of 3,000 or 4,000 acres of pine land is secured, the trees are boxed, the still built and in a few weeks turpentine and resin are being hauled to the nearest railroad station and shipped.

It was such a day as early June brings at the North, that a little party from Chicago visited a turpentine farm newly opened, just beyond the limit of the village.

The boxing of the trees, which appeared to be going on when we arrived, consists of cutting, a short distance up from the root of the tree, an incline plane in the outer layers of the wood, but not reaching to the heart, and at the base a receptacle into which the crude runs. Only a man who has been carefully taught can do this boxing successfully, as the incline must be just right in order to have the sap run well, and the lower portion must hold a quart. Like all the work done in a turpentine orchard, boxing is done by the piece and by those who make a specialty of it. The work of the workmen and turpentiners is dippers, chippers and boxers. Each man is especially expert at one or the other of these, although those who have worked long at the business and are somewhat enterprising are able to do all three successfully. The boxing has already been explained. The chipping is cutting off a thin piece from the upper part of the box, which soon sears over, so that the gum sap may again flow freely. The chipping is accomplished with a peculiar curved knife, with a blade about three inches long on a handle, to the end of which is attached a heavy oblong ball.

Ordinarily a tree yields about a quart of crude gum in a week, and it is the duty of the dipper to remove this to the barrels in which it is conveyed to the still. It would naturally be supposed that this would be accomplished with some sort of a dipper, but it is not. What is used is a broad, perfectly flat paddle about twice the size of those used by cooks in turning pancakes. The dipper's paddle, however, is quite different in shape, being pointed at the end. It is astonishing to see with what dexterous skill the dipper will remove the gum from the box without losing a single drop with their flat paddles.

The government among the turpentiners is somewhat on the patriarchal plan, and the free, easy, somewhat dependent life is one which admirably suits the average Southern colored man. In the group of little pine buildings, which is known as the village of Turpentine Farm, is a store where such articles as are likely to be demanded are kept for sale, and the laborer can have such goods in return for his work. Such a man as is working six days in a week is unknown on a turpentine farm. The ordinary week's work is three days and a half, the week, as far as labor is concerned, ending Friday noon. Friday afternoon is a half holiday that is religiously observed by the workers in turpentine orchards. Saturday is devoted to getting ready for Sunday, which is more often than otherwise occupied in the excitement of getting and keeping religion, and involves late hours and often the most violent exercise. Monday is required to recover from the effects of all this, and on Tuesday morning the turpentine farm hands begin their week's work, which ends, as has been said, Friday noon, for it is only under great stress of urging that the turpentine farm laborer can be induced to work until Friday night.

The best and most ambitious workers make $7 per week, and the others less, but they are all perfectly satisfied.

They work keeping time to song; the gentle temperature is no more demanding than the sun of their modest wants; the music of the wind through the pines makes a balsam-charged air vibrant above their beds of pine boughs. They know no ills, and are as happy and care free as the mockingbird that flies above them as they work. While at the present time there is no employment that suits the average colored laborer of the South better than turpentine farming, the indications are that this will not be true of the rising generation, who are evidencing the discontent that incites to unending effort, but, in the meantime, their progenitors are joyfully content.

While the light-hearted turpentine workers are boxing, chipping and dipping, and the experts at the still are separating the residuum of the crude gum, which is resin, from the spirits that is the true essence of commerce, the unending discussion of those interested in forestry is going forward as to whether or not turpentine a pine tree injures it for lumber. There can be no doubt that to continue to turpentine a tree for a term of years, say ten or fifteen, does make it well useless for lumber, as the heart becomes soft and spongy. For a shorter time, say three years, and it is during the first years that the best results are obtained, the injury is scarcely perceptible. Of course, the tree does not continue to grow after it has been boxed, and there is much more danger from fire after a tract has been turpented than before, but, aside from this, it is claimed that a pine forest is not deteriorated by being turpented for a short time.—Florida letter to the Chicago Tribune.

TO TAX CORPORATIONS.

The U. S. Supreme Court Decides That States Have That Power.

WASHINGTON, March 15.—The attention of the United States Supreme Court was given largely to-day to the power of States to tax franchises of corporations, such as express, telegraph and railroad companies. Two Kentucky cases, involving the constitutionality of the State law of 1892, one affecting the Henderson bridge and the other the Adams Express Company, were both decided favorably to the State.

A general review of the rights of the States to enact laws of this character was also promulgated through Justice Brewer, in an opinion denying a petition by various telegraph and express companies for a rehearing in the cases in which the tax acts of the Ohio Legislature and Indiana were involved, the law having been sustained by the decisions in these cases rendered at a former sitting.

Justices Field, Harlan, Brown and White dissented. Justice White read the dissenting opinion. He said the law was a direct attempt to tax property outside the State, and levy a burden on interstate commerce. He predicted that to-day's decision would be far-reaching in its effects.

On motion of Attorney-General McKenna, a mandate was ordered to be issued in the case of the steamer Three Friends.

The court dismissed the Las Vegas Land Grant case, because of its abandonment on account of the resignation of Secretary Smith. The case involves the ownership of 175 square miles of land in the vicinity of Las Vegas, N. M. To-day's action confirms the title of the claimants, if the Government does not renew its appeal.

RAILWAYS BLOCKADED.

Roads in the Northwest Have Much Snow to Contend With.

ST. PAUL (Minn.), March 15.—Railroads have never before in their history in the Northwest had much to contend with because of drifting snow. It is stated that there are 200 cars of freight at initial points and elsewhere destined for towns off the main lines in Dakota and Minnesota that cannot reach their destination until branch lines are opened. It is stated that there is suffering in South Dakota by reason of the branch lines being closed. In that State over 600 miles of road have been practically abandoned for fully two weeks. Nearly all of this mileage is on the branch lines of the Milwaukee system and the Northwestern. Part of it belongs to the Great Northern and Northern Pacific. Many towns in South Dakota have had no mail for some time, to say nothing of freight and passenger traffic. Through trains on the main lines of the Northern Pacific and Great Northern and the Soo are running, but from two to seven hours late. These roads are concentrating their efforts to keep coast lines open. The trains between here and Chicago are running on fair time.

KENTUCKY SENATORSHIP.

Balloting Will Not Begin Until the 23d Instant.

FRANKFORT (Ky.), March 15.—There were large crowds in the Senate chamber in the House of Representatives to-day in anticipation of a ballot for United States Senator to succeed Blaine, but in the event the late Senator Sawyer both branches adjourned about noon without joint session.

Attorney-General Taylor has filed a lengthy written opinion, in which he holds that the ballot for United States Senator may be legally taken at any time.

It will have no effect on the Legislature, however, who will not ballot until March 23d.
