NEW PUBLICATIONS.

"Harper's Round Table," one of the very first order of youth's journals, and which we have had the pleasure so many years of commending in these columns, has changed to a monthly from a weekly issue.

"The North American Review" for November (New York) has these papers: "The Life of Tennyson," by Edmund Gosse; "The Commercial Value of the Shipyard," Lewis Nixon; "Effect of the New Gold upon California," Charles A. Conant; "The United States and the Spanish-American Colonies," the Mexican Minister; "Thirty Years of American Trade," M. G. Mulhall, F. S. S.; "Leoproy and Hawaiian Annexation," Dr. Prince A. Morrow; "The Present Railway Situation," H. J. Sawcomb; "Woman's Political Evolution," J. Elliot Foster, President Woman's Republican Association of the United States; "A Review of the Cuban Question," by the Hon. Hannis Taylor, late United States Minister to Spain; "Suggestion for a Stable Currency," E. J. Sanford; "Beautiful Evil," Edward C. Jackson; "American School Histories on the Revolution," A. W. Savary.

Carroll D. Wright, the United States Commissioner of Labor Statistics, is charged by "The New Time" (Chicago) in its November number with having deliberately distorted facts and figures in order to show an increase in wages which does not exist. H. L. Bliss, makes the charge, and adduces testimony. The November issue contains articles by William Dean Howells, John Wainwright, Dean Laman Abbott, Henry D. Lloyd, Mrs. Helen Campbell, Herbert N. Casson, Professor Frank Parsons, the Rev. J. Pratt Wilson and a score of others. A portrait of Henry George, a new illustrated story by J. W. Sullivan, and stirring by Walter Crane, and some striking editorials by Frederick U. Adams and B. O. Flower are features of this magazine.

"The Bookman" (New York) an illustrated literary journal, has these contents for November: Chronicle and comment, American, English, miscellaneous. With portraits of Henry Hart, Ritchie, the late Lord Tennyson, Lady Tennyson and their son; Bret Harte, Maude Adams as "Babbie," Silhouettes of "Hans" and illustrations of "The Way to Rainald," "Within the Walls," by Alice Ward, "Poppies Red," by Thomas Walsh; "Tantalus," by Harry Thurston Peck; "Launcelot and Gawaine," by Richard Lovell; "The Oak in Autumn," by Benjamin F. Leggett; "Old Lamps for New Ones," sketches as essays by Charles Dickens, with portrait by Eytzinger; caricatures of Dickens, by James MacArthur; "The Progress of 'Fountain Refarum,'" by Harry Thurston Peck; "Emerson and Concord," with fac-simile autographs and portraits of Emerson, Thoreau, A. Bronson Alcott and Margaret Fuller, by M. A. De Wolfe Howe; "An Epoch-Making Lexicon," with portrait of Edward von Wolfflin, by John C. Rolfe; "London Letter," by W. Robertson Nicol; "Parables of Alfred Maniere," "The Bookman's Letter-Box," "Reviews of New Books," "Novel Notes"; "The Bookman's Table."

"The Arena" (Boston) for November brings a great array of contributions. The frontispiece is a portrait of Governor John R. Rogers of Washington. His paper "Freedom and Its Opportunities," sets forth the bottom conditions of freedom, the menaces thereto. Giffen's book, "The Case Against Bimetalism," has never been more severely and successfully answered than by Judge George H. Smith. Editor Barkley sets forth the advantages of a more direct and frank system of legislation. Professor Frank Parsons continues his arraignment of "The Telegraph Monopoly." One of the most valuable symposia of late is that entitled "The Laborer's View of the Labor Question," in which three laboring men are the contributors, Herbert M. Ramp, W. Edwards and William Emory Kearns. B. O. Fowler's article is on "Practical Measures for Promoting Manhood and Preventing Crime." The Demand for Scientific Journalism, is discussed by John Henderson Garney. The editor's article is the second of his historical series entitled "Is History a Science?"

Appleton's "Popular Science Monthly," edited by W. J. Youmans, published by D. Appleton & Co. (New York), these contents for November, 1897: "Principles of Taxation," XII, by Hon. David A. Wells; "Scientific Researches in Australia," by Professor E. P. Evans; "The British Association at Toronto," by Professor Daniel S. Murray; "The Physical Geography of Europe, X, Germany," by Professor William Z. Ripley; "Burs and Beggar's-Ticks," by Professor Spencer Trotter; "Expert Testimony in the Behring Sea Controversy," by Professor T. C. Mendenhall; "Natural and Artificial Perfumes," by M. Jacques Passy; "Archaeology and the Antiquity of Man," by Sir J. Evans, K. C. B.; "An Experiment in Citizen Training," by Winifred Buck; "Sketch of Carl Vogt" (with portrait); "Are the American People Civilized?" "Abstractions in Education," "Political Bossism," "Scientific Literature," "Fragments of Science."

"The New England Magazine" for November (Boston) has these contents: "The Constitution," frontispiece; "Old Ironsides," Edmund J. Carpenter; "Few Types from an Old New England Town," M. W. R.; "A Thoroughbred" (a story), Annie E. P. Searing; "The Town of Brandon, Vt.," Augusta Kellogg; "New England History and Romance," Charles Chouteau; "Daniel Webster on Cape Cod and Its Inhabitants," "The Children's Institutions of Boston," William I. Cole; "Two Champions of Religious Liberty in New England: Obadiah Holmes and John Myles," William Adams; "Ezek Hopkins, First Admiral of the American Navy," Robert Grievie; "A Painter of Monks," Charles E. Hurd; "A Fool and His Wife" (a story), William R. A. Wilson; "Rosemary" (a poem), Abbie Farwell Brown.

There are few men who know as much about their neighbors as does the Rev. Thomas P. M'Loughlin, who in the November "Donahoe's" (Boston) draws some vivid pictures of daily life.

"In Darkest Chinatown." From his vantage point, in the very heart of this transplanted Celestial Empire, the rector of the Transfiguration has looked into the lives of those among whom his lot has been cast, in truth "man-kind of every description." In "Crucibles of Bread" Austin O'Malley gives utterance to many philosophical reflections. The Rev. G. Lee, C. S. Sp., considers the religious side of Don Quixote's character. Other papers of interest are: William D. Kelly's tribute to the memory of Benjamin Joseph Webb; "Loretta Order, Its Foundation and Progress," by Eleanor M. Parker, and Mary A. Desmond's reply to M. T. Elder's paper on "Rural Decadence." There are several short stories: "The Scarlet Glove" ends very happily; and a serial by Henry Austin Adams, M. A., begins. Some biographical sketches by prominent Catholics are given in "People in Print." Women with a tendency "to screech themselves into print" will be interested in the editorial comments in "Men and Things." Lovers of good poetry will like the poem, "Andante Consolante," by Mary Cecil Hyland; it is of exceptional merit.

"Ginton's Magazine" (New York) for November has these papers: "Reform in Municipal Government," by Hon. W. L. Strong, Mayor of New York; "The Henry George Candidate," by James C. Enforced Idleness; "A Letter From Kansas," "Henry C. Carey's Rural Table," "Position of Ginton's Magazine," "Editorial Crucible," "Institute Work," "Wage and Capitalist Classes," "Work for the Poor," "Outlines in Reading," "Aids to Reading," "Local Center Work," "Economics in the Magazines."

"The American Monthly Review of Reviews" tells the story of the invention by Charles M. Hall, a graduate of Oberlin College, of the process now employed for the production of aluminum on an extensive scale. After speaking of Mr. Hall's college career and graduation, the "Review" writes as follows: "The 'Review' writes as follows: 'With only the most meager equipment, without financial resources and with little encouragement from friends or associates, Hall now entered on a series of experiments which in less than a year resulted in the discovery of what proved to be a cheap, practical and efficient process for the extraction of aluminum.' Hall himself said that his first work in this direction did not have reference to electrolysis as the solvent. At intervals during his college course he had experimented in various crude attempts to produce the metal by the electrolysis of aluminum chloride. He had familiarized himself with all that had been said about aluminum, and understood thoroughly the process of its production. In 1884 he spent several weeks in an attempt to reduce the oxide of aluminum by carbon at a high temperature with the aid of other reagents. Almost all of these experiments failed, but the furnace capable of fusing platinum, he failed to accomplish the object in view, and it was then that he turned to electrolysis as the only practicable method. It was natural that at first he should wish to make trial of the process then known as the electrolysis of aluminum by the electrolysis of the double chloride. He says that he determined to follow out this process carefully, and if possible to improve it. Whether or not he would have succeeded in his efforts to perfect this process must remain a matter of conjecture. In October, 1885, four months after his graduation from college, he evolved an entirely new plan of procedure. Instead of applying electricity directly to the chloride—a method which had already been tried and found wanting—he would endeavor to find a stable solvent for alumina itself (the oxide) and would then reduce the pure alumina from the solution. It was, of course, desirable that the metal should be dissolved at a reasonably low temperature and that the solvent itself should be practically unaffected, so that the oxide might be added continuously as fast as it was produced by the current. Hall believed that he would find such a solvent in the fluoride of calcium (fluospar), and he experimented with that substance; later he tried the fluorides of magnesium, sodium, and potassium. He found that all these compounds were extremely difficult to fuse, and that the alumina, when fused, dissolve the alumina appreciably. These facts he might have inferred, perhaps, from the descriptions of these minerals given in the books, but nothing short of actual experiment and observation would satisfy him, and he took nothing for granted. In his search for a solvent he finally determined to test the double fluoride of aluminum and sodium (cryolite). Deville, who had experimented with this mineral thirty years before, had apparently never discovered that it was a solvent which fused alumina. If it could be proven to be such a solvent, the most difficult part of the quest seemed in a fair way to be solved. Hall's first experiments with cryolite were not altogether satisfactory to him, but he attributed each failure to defects in his apparatus. He fused some cryolite in a clay crucible, dissolved alumina in this path, and passed an electric current through the solution. On the carbon rod which served as the negative electrode a substance was deposited which had the appearance of aluminum, but it was not the pure metal. A portion of the clay fused with the metal, and was made seem to yield its silica to the bath, and thus the product was rendered impure. The only way to obviate this was to employ an insoluble lining for the crucible. The first experiment with a carbon-lined crucible was successful. By the method of the Grove battery, within two hours' time a reasonable amount of aluminum of a high degree of purity was obtained.
