

STORING FLOOD WATERS.

IMPORTANT AND STRONG ADDRESS TO THE PEOPLE.

A Convention Called for November 14th, to be held in San Francisco.

At a meeting of the California State Association for the Storage of Flood Waters, held in San Francisco Thursday night, at which Chief Justice Beatty presided, it was resolved to call a convention to meet in San Francisco November 14th, and an address was prepared and ordered issued. The address is given below in full:

To the People of the State of California: The commonwealth of California has completed that fully rounded period of its growth, from the level of which it will rise to a higher development chiefly through the storage of the flood waters which now run to waste in the channels of its rivers, and the application of the waters thus conserved to the advancing necessities of its horticultural, agricultural, mining and mechanical activities.

From the foundation of this commonwealth the value of water in the development of its resources was fully appreciated, and the perception of this value has eventuated in the appropriation of the waters of its rivers, which, when combined with the indefeasible riparian ownership, has placed the natural water supply under the control of primitive and vested rights.

The great leading resources of the State have been developed to their maximum within the limitation permitted by the natural conditions relating to the supply of water as an indispensable element.

From the outset the suspension of agricultural productiveness referable to an arid summer, comprising seven months of the year, has constituted an obstacle to that intensive culture which alone supplies profitable occupation to a large number of tillers of the soil, and has denied to the broad, agricultural areas of the State that density of population which otherwise would have supervened.

The agricultural populations of the State have not only remained inconsiderable in numbers, but even in some of the most fertile areas show a steady decline. The opposite condition to this is observable only where irrigation has been resorted to. But even in these instances the limit of irrigation has been reached by reason of the application of all the available waters afforded by natural conditions.

Further growth of population and increase of profitable industry will depend upon the artificial conservation of the flood waters, which not only run to waste through the channels of the

COFFEE HEART.

Many People Think They Have Heart Disease.

"My husband and I used to drink Mocha and Java coffee at 40 cents a pound. We made it strong and always had it for breakfast; sometimes in cold weather for luncheon and dinner. A form of heart disease came on to both of us. Husband complained of his heart missing a beat sometimes and that he could not sleep after drinking coffee for the 40 clock dinner. I had pains at the heart and very peculiar smothering sensations, frequently accompanied with sick headache. My physician forbid the use of coffee, and we were put on Postum Food Coffee, with the result that both husband and myself have fully regained our health and our hearts are all right and perfect now.

"I have reached such perfection in making Postum that husband cannot tell either by look or taste whether he is drinking fine coffee or Postum, and he is a connoisseur in coffee. We drink Postum two or three times a day and it never fails on our taste. "A good many people make Postum in a very slipshod manner; that is, they dash a little into the coffee pot and let it bubble up a little while and serve it; but that makes the flattest kind of a drink. On the contrary, when four heaping teaspoons to the pint of water are used and the Postum allowed to boil fifteen minutes after the boiling begins (not counting after it is put on the stove but after the real boiling begins) then one obtains a beverage that is worth while.

"I have no objections to your using my name. Mrs. J. M. Courtwright, 800 Third Street, S., Minneapolis, Minn." Postum is sold by all first-class grocers.

streams from the uplifted areas which command the valleys, but by reason of their torrential character in winter become obstructive agencies. Thus the profitability of agriculture has equal destructive enemies in the aridity of the summer months and the injurious overflow of winter floods. Our horticultural and viticultural industries, under the clemency of our climate, are capable of giving to the commonwealth the largest rural population of any equal area in the world, but the investment of the necessary capital is attended by the extra-hazard limitations of profit by reason of unreliable and unscientific cultivation.

The mining industry of the State, which, notwithstanding the vastness of past production, is now clearly perceived to be in its infancy, has reached that limit of future profitability which is unalterably fixed by the available water for its prosecution.

Notwithstanding the importance of field culture, in all its diversified activities, a special business relation to wealth, no commonwealth rises to the level of material well-being, commensurate with the opportunities of modern civilization, which is devoid of manufacturing activity. In all its past history, the absence of cheap coal, that reservoir of mechanical power, has denied to California the development of its manufacturing skill and the profitable investment of capital in this higher and more profitable field of human activity.

The high price of coal, from which mechanical power alone could be derived, has placed the manufacturing and transportation interests of the State equally at disadvantage. That condition has happily passed away and a new condition has superseded-one in which California possesses superlative advantages.

The natural topography of the State lends itself admirably to the development of mechanical power by the force of gravitation. Coursing down the western flank of the Sierra Nevada Mountains in parallel channels are streams having their sources in natural reservoirs of snow on the high summits and from the perpetual glaciers of the highest mountain peaks.

The electrical transmission of power capable of being generated by these rivers would transform the industries of the State. Its economic creation possesses incalculable value to the agricultural and horticultural interests by furnishing a cheap power for the application of the higher and more economic method of irrigation by pumping. It will enable our people to devote their industry to manufactures and to all the more profitable occupations which always attend the productions of skilled labor, thus conferring upon the State a fully rounded, self-sustaining capacity and eventually evolving an empire of wealth and population.

To all these must be added the conservation of the navigability of the rivers by preserving their channels free from the waste of the summer months. A fully navigable stage of water in the two great rivers of the valley would keep their channels clear of the detritus which descends from natural erosion incident to the cultivation of the foothills and to mining operations at nearly all altitudes. The storage of the flood waters would place the flood variations of the navigable inland waters of California under the direct and intelligent control of man, and thus settle all conflict of interest between the mining and the agricultural sections of the State.

The storage of flood waters would also facilitate the reclamation of the fertile lands now relegated to wasteful disuse because of the destructive overflows. The accomplishment of the work proposed is attended with many difficulties, but when cost is correlated with the values to be created by expenditure, as in the proposition under consideration, the financial difficulties are diminished to comparative insignificance.

These statements presented in a spirit of moderation and candor being accepted, it follows that the people of California stand in the presence of a crisis in the history of this commonwealth. The State possesses vast primary resource in the flood waters which flow to waste in the channels of its rivers. The value residing in this property itself, if wise, economic and honestly administered measures can be devised for storing these waters and applying them to the augmentation of every natural resource.

The question which demands immediate attention is: How shall this new force be brought into being? The answer to this question is of the highest importance to every citizen of the State, affecting the private fortune of every individual. In view of the paramount considerations underlying this question, it has been deemed expedient and wise to call into convention for the purpose of sober and thoughtful deliberation the leading public-spirited citizens of the State, representatives of every interest to whose councils the solution of this question may be submitted.

The attention of the people of California is earnestly directed to the great importance of this convention. It is hoped and believed that its deliberations will inaugurate a new era of growth and progress. In this belief, a convention is hereby called to assemble in the city of San Francisco on the 14th day of November, to consider the bearing which the increase of the available waters of the State for agricultural, horticultural, mining and mechanical purposes will have upon its future growth and prosperity, and to devise plans and means whereby this important result may be attained.

To the convention hereby called the following persons and classes are invited as delegates: The Governor and Lieutenant Governor of the State. The Chief Justice of the Supreme Court. The original committee. Three representatives from each commercial organization in the cities of the State. Two members of each Board of Supervisors from each county. The Mayors of all municipalities, or Chairmen of Boards of Trustees. Three delegates from each Assembly District, to be appointed by the Boards of Supervisors of the counties comprising the Assembly districts. All members of the California Press Association.

All members of the San Francisco Publishers' Association and representatives of the leading daily newspapers of Los Angeles and Oakland. Fifty delegates at large, to be appointed by the Governor. The President or a representative of each irrigation system actually distributing water for agricultural purposes. The President or a representative of each incorporated water ditch company supplying water for mining purposes. Such individual citizens as may be selected by members of the original committee, or by authority of this meeting vested in the President, as sustain a special business relation to any enterprise dependent for the permanent value of the enterprise itself upon the conservation of water. The usual arrangements for reduced rates of transportation will be made by the committee.
