The friends of George Boyd and of M. G. Samanog respectively are urging these gentlemen to become candidates for Mayor of Tucson. It is also stated that the present incumbent will also be a candidate. Either of those mentioned would be very acceptable.

A careful average of the vote in Pima county gives 128 Republican majority. As personal preferences extend largely to the vote, some think the vote cast, but others think the vote cast, but others think the vote cast.

The weather was somewhat wintry and stormy to-day. The heavy clouds came occasional showers accompanied with gusts of cold and suggestive of the sore and yellow leaf season. Accustomed as the people of this section are to warmth and sunshine, the sky seemed gloomy indeed.

The Star says John A. Logan, Jr., was dismissed from West Point. The young cadet resigned. With others he had been guilty of indiscretions incompatible with the discipline of the military academy, and was requested to tender his resignation. There is quite a distinction between the two methods of leaving.

When E. J. Smith of this city, was a resident of Honolulu, he was an officer in one of the regiments of that territory. Under his command were princes and dignitaries of the island, and Mr. Smith, in his official capacity, had opportunities to "lose" around the future kings and potentates in the most approved army fashion.

It is a very rare occurrence in a political contest where two opposing candidates run for the same office and both are elected. A case of the kind has occurred in this county, however. G. A. Avery and C. L. Murphy were opposing candidates for the office of Coroner, and although Avery received the majority of votes cast, Murphy also receives a certificate of election. This is occasioned by an unusual law giving each county two coroners. The Governor's proclamation only designated one Coroner for each county, as the old law had been generally ignored, but the district attorney expresses the opinion that where two coroners are elected, the one elected by the majority is to be considered the one commissioned. It is hoped that being doubly commissioned, this sense will not obligate the people to furnish subjects for the employment of both.

DEMING. A SPORTSMAN'S LOVE.

A sportsman named by Cupid's dart. Said to the maid he loved. My dear, you will love me as I love you. With lips of coral, so very dear.

"I must think of my mad lot. My heart, my mind, my soul, my love, should my fate decreeing come to naught. I think I would lay this buffalo.

"Hear me, my dear, I do declare. I'll gladly, freely give thee. My love, my heart, my soul, my life. Thy love shall be my life, my love, my life."

"You offer me a life of love. To your arms, my dear, I'll go. If you refuse, your heart is true. My love, my heart, my soul, my life."

"She smiled, the mink, and, blushing, said. 'Think not that I would love you over. Knowing how long I have loved you. Besides, you must make a being-up lover.'

Additional Local. The people have quit stuffing ballot boxes and will stuff the turkey.

Epitaph.—The two juries which were out all last night occupied rooms in the court house on either side of Judge Johnson's chambers, and the gentlemen composing those juries, in their earnest endeavors to come to a decision, became boisterous at times, and at one time the judge rolled over in bed and groaned in tones audible enough to be heard on the outside, "Oh, this is dreadful."

Col. J. W. Haskin, one of the most energetic and able men among the pioneers of Arizona, is in the city, on his way to California to spend the holidays. Col. Haskin has been particularly successful about the mines, and is the first smelter into that vicinity, and had also built several mills in the Territory, his last venture being with the Phoenix and Globe, and he has been successful in spite of all its obstacles. He recently sold his interests in the Old Dominion mine, and has been successful in his new enterprise.

At a recent wedding in South Carolina, says the Charleston News, a young lawyer begged leave to offer a new scheme of matrimony, which he proposed to the bride and groom. He proposed "that one man in the company should be selected president; that this president should be duly sworn to keep faithfully secret all communications that should be forwarded to him in his official department that night and that any unmarried gentleman or lady should write her name on a piece of paper and under it the name of the person they wished to marry, then hand it to the president for inspection, and if any gentleman wished to be married, he should choose either the president or the woman who had chosen a secret to all but themselves and the president.

A suffering. To all who are suffering from errors and indiscretions of youth, nervous weakness, early decay, loss of manhood, etc., I will send a recipe that will cure you in ten days. His Dead Brother's Wife.

An exceedingly sad and romantic story of misplaced love has been discovered by the late to the finding of a young man from England in search of his sister.

Four years ago a resident of White-chapel, London, brought to his house a girl from the continent, a beautiful, amiable, and well-matched couple. But this bride had not been willingly won. At one time during their courtship he thought he possessed her heart, but after their engagement she met the youthful Lord, an Earl's son, who was beautiful, and his family expected his pretty face and curly hair and white hands and aristocratic elegance would be lost by several generations of extravagance.

How pretty Jessie Hart met the young Lord does not appear, but when they did meet she fell in love with him. After a little love making, however, they had a bitter quarrel, and Jessie returned to her old lover again. He had been constant, but Jessie's wife, the jilted sister of Miss Hart, who really meant to have married her, but that he loved her still. Jessie finally consented to elope with him, and a few days later a little quiet and so-called woman came here and engaged rooms in a crowded house in Madison street. She showed traces of great beauty in her features, and her hair was a rich brown. Though she paid her rental regularly she seemed to be in want and burdened with sorrow. The mystery of her life she never told. Two months ago she disappeared as suddenly as she came, but the visit of Mr. John Miller revealed the story. He is William Miller's brother, and is the agent of the British Cable supporting the sale of the cable to the city of London. He is a horse called Prince Charlie. By some means he heard that a lady of the name of Hart was in the city, and he came to take her back to the old home. It was reported last night that he found her living in seclusion at White-stone. Her husband died two years ago. Franking (L. L.) Dispatch.

Made His First Hit. And still another New York millionaire has put his son into business. It is reported that the young man has made his first hit, and has won $5,000 and told him to go out upon the street and speculate. Two hours later the son came back and said:

"I should say so. How did you make it?"

"Bought a horse."

"Just so. I've bought a horse for $5,000 which the owner has all along been asking $7,000 for, and if you have any more loss change I know where I can buy a horse for you."

The old girl didn't seem to have any more.

Not Left Out. "There were five of 'em on the corner. One said that his wife was cleaning house and had every room upset."

The second observed that he had left six painters at work on his house.

The third said he was tearing out partitions and building a wing.

The fourth said he had added that while the other three were at work, he had had a chimney torn out and his hall widened.

"Gentlemen," said the fifth man as he drew a long breath, "I don't want to be looked upon as one who is trying to crawl out of his fair share of this world's misery, and therefore take this opportunity of informing you that I have just bought new carpets and a parlor suit I have been obliged to mortgage my house and shall probably lose it."

A Man Who Never Had an Opinion. In getting a jury at London to try the outlaw Andy Taylor the following dialogue took place:

Judge—"Are you a householder in London?"

Jury—"Yes, sir, I keep house."

Judge—"Have you formed or expressed an opinion as to the guilt or innocence of the defendant Taylor?"

Jury—"No, sir, I have no opinion except what I've heard."

Judge—"Have you any opinion about anything?"

Jury—"No, sir, I have no opinion about anything."

Judge—"Did you ever have an opinion?"

Jury—"No, sir, never did, Judge."

He was told that his service were not needed by the country, and that he could "stand aside."—Knoxville (Pa.) Chronicle.

A Startling Prophecy Fulfilled. The other day, while a party of Washington newspaper correspondents were seated in the office of Judge Adcox, they were waiting for the judge to enter the room a neatly dressed colored woman. She looked the general firmly in the eye, and asked:

"Have you found any more for me to carry?"

She said she had not, and she had not had the woman turned abruptly around and left the room as mechanically as she had entered it. Gen. Adcox, who had been sitting at the desk, saw her a few moments ago. Looking up full in the face and never taking her eyes from him, she said she knew that the President would be assassinated, and she was determined to prevent it. She said the President would be killed the day following, while on the way to the Capitol to take the oath of office. She said she had the way from South Carolina to the city of Washington, and she would be there in a few days after the 4th of March she came to me again, and I called her attention to the fact that the President had not been killed. She said that was true, but that she would be there in a few days after the 4th of March she came to me again, and I called her attention to the fact that the President had not been killed. She said that was true, but that she would be there in a few days after the 4th of March she came to me again, and I called her attention to the fact that the President had not been killed.

He Wanted a Chance. Husband—"Do you know, my dear, that the men would be happier if the women would follow some of the customs of the Japanese?"

Wife—"Why you horrid thing! You wouldn't want me to blacken my teeth, would you?"

Husband—"No; but there is one thing the Japanese women do which, if you followed might give me a chance to look in the mirror occasionally."

Husband—"They don't draw their hair only once in four days, darling."—New York Journal.
