From the Rev. of the Council. We believe that most of our readers will peruse with pleasure the following sketch of the life of the late Emperor Soudan.

He was born a slave on the coffee plantation of Mr. Latet, one of the old planters who have survived the various revolutions that have occurred on this island, and who is yet still living in Porto Principe. It is related that Faustine, meeting him not many years ago, said, "Though I am Emperor, I still recognize you as my master."

To what he replied, "And I am proud to consider myself your master, and to be able to say in the instance of the captive of Fortune! When the French evacuated St. Domingo, Faustine, then five years old, entered the army under Desallines as a common soldier. Under Petion he fought with Christophe, and from grades to grade reached a Colonelship, just at the time of the fall of Boyer. His taciturn manner in rare visits among negroes caused him to pass for a discreet man, and made him a partner in the different secret revolutions that took place between the years 1813 and 1817.

Mode General of a Division, he owed his election to the Presidency to a chance that brought his name into consideration before the Senate. Two years he presided before that body for the office; the negroes were equally becoming, and after many ballottings the body failed to elect Faustine. He reconciled the conflicting interests of the two parties, and was in his turn taken by the negroes voted for him because of his color, and the mulattoes in consideration of his supposed freedom from the taint of race.

Too soon, however, the mulattoes found that instead of a subservient tool, they had elected a master. Faustine emerged victoriously from all his difficulties and revolutions; but his victims were stained with a long list of the most cruel executions. Perfidious advisers bound him to his career of vengeance; he thought at one time of nothing less than the total extermination of the white race, who composed a very large proportion of the population. The energetic remonstrances of M. Beynaud, Consul General of France, finally drew him from his murderous course. He appealed at first to his feelings of humanity, and then represented the danger that might be produced by the intervention of Europe, who were becoming disgusted with his courses. This last argument was of great impression on the mind of Faustine, and he ceased his persecutions.

Faustine had been President two years, during which time he had occupied himself principally in conquering the Spanish part of the island, which he erected into a free and independent republic, when, to the surprise of all Europe, he was proclaimed Emperor. It is the general opinion that Faustine did not aspire to this position. His ascension to this office is accounted for in this manner: A certain number of citizens met on the 20th of August, 1849, and resolved a petition to the House of Representatives, praying that the title of Emperor be conferred on his excellency the President, General Val Jalin, who commanded the garrison, and the greater part of the officers who were in Porto Principe, were secretly in favor of the President, and manifested the same desire. The House took into consideration this petition on the 25th August, and passed it by a vote of 100 yeas, and 10 nays. The Senate, where it was passed by a vote of 10 yeas, and 10 nays. On the 26th, the two supreme bodies met and carried the nomination of Emperor to Faustine, and presented him a crown and a cross, expressing themselves in terms submissive enough to have satisfied the ancient despots of Europe. In this manner it was that, to the astonishment of the world, this little Republic became part of an Empire.

Faustine Soudan, though generally represented to be of middle size, in new forty-four years old. He is of build stature, expanded breast, and broad shoulders, and is stout; on foot he appears less high than he really is, because of his obesity; but on horseback, as he is a good rider, he appears to have a more manly and virile appearance. His features have not that bold and savage expression that is observable in natives of Africa. His physiognomy denotes intelligence, and his smile is pleasant and attractive. When on foot he wears a green uniform, perfectly adjusted to his body, a sword, and a three cornered hat. Though naturally taciturn, he speaks occasionally with gaiety and all ways with a certain dignity. It has been said that he neither reads nor writes, but this is a mistake. He writes his name in a legible manner, and in an emergency can write a letter. Every night he reads, without assistance, the history of Hayti, a work composed by a native of the island, called Madion, who has recently been made a Baron.

Since his accession to the imperial chair, Faustine has learned the nature of his people. He has created orders and titles of nobility, for which he has required great popularity, for the natives of Hayti, as were their ancestors, are exceedingly vain. At present there are two orders of cavaliers in the empire: the military order of St. Francis, and the order of the Legion of Honor. The Emperor is, in virtue of his office, member of both.

The titles created by Faustine are those of Prince, Duke, Count, Barons and Cavaliers. The Princes and Dukes are among his favorites, and Major Generals and Vice Admirals; the Barons are from among his Brigadier Generals; the Cavaliers and the Cavaliers from his Lieutenant Colonels. Nothing is easier than to form such a nobility. To assimilate, in some respects, the civil and military orders, the Senators, members of the House, Judges and Intendants are all Barons. For the women, besides the title which they take from their husbands, the title of Marchioness has been expressly created.

MISS LINDA.—A Stockholm paper announces that Jenny Lind had sold to that city twenty thousand dollars, to be distributed among the poor. We find in our files the following paragraph respecting the lady: "Miss Lind, a Swedish lady, recently received by a gentleman of Decatur, Philadelphia, in the boat, and according to her own account, this is the first time she has been in the city. She had concluded her voyage never to return. She had concluded her New York engagement, having given to that city without any disappointment the wholly unprecedented number of twenty-two concerts to crowded audiences, in the largest public places. She states, what is scarcely more surprising here, where a contrary opinion prevails, that Mr. Barum behaves to her in the most gentlemanly and distinguished manner. "Every report, however, she contradicts in the most positive and emphatic terms. So far from her being brought to London by Barum in 1851, she states that it is wholly untrue that she ever engaged with him, either for London or any other city or part of the European continent. Part of her engagement with Mr. Barum is to give concerts at Havana, and she states that she is perfectly satisfied with such engagement, in the course of January, 1851. She writes apparently very much pleased with the American people, having met with a great many very good, kind, respectable friends in her transient tour. At the date of the letter she was fulfilling a concert engagement with color in Philadelphia." [Man. Guard.]

Our Country. Population of the Atlantic States.—We give below a statement of the population of the Atlantic States, with the increase since 1840. The figures are not in all cases official, but the full returns were not yet at hand in all cases.

THE LATE INDIAN TREATY AND ITS OBSERVANCE.—From the San Antonio Ledger, we gather the following particulars furnished by a gentleman who resides in the vicinity of Fredericksburg, from which it would appear, little or no good has resulted from the late treaty effected by Judge Rollins.

On the 7th or 8th instant, a party of three Indians, of whose tribe is not known, that the general who had charge of the horses belonging to a detachment of Capt. Crow's company of rangers, one of their arrows piercing his breast and lodging in his spine, another entering his right side, killing him almost instantly. They then succeeded in carrying off ten horses. This occurred about ten o'clock in the morning, five or six miles to the left of the road leading from Sabine creek to Fredericksburg, where the detachment is stationed, almost within gunshot of the camp.

On the night of the 7th, another party entered the enclosure, cut loose and carried off a number of horses, belonging to some teamsters, that were tied to the gallery posts of Mr. Degeer's house, (General) Mr. Degeer's place on the Guadalupe, where the Fredericksburg road crosses the same. On the night of the 10th, another party stole all the horses belonging to Mr. Zink's new farm, on the Vega Trail, six miles above Fredericksburg. On the night of the 10th, a Lipan party, in an enclosure in Fredericksburg, a lot of horses belonging to Captain Ankrum and Messrs. Evans & Walker.

And on the night of the 15th, another party, supposed from their trail to be five or six in number, stole a number of horses from the stable and yard at Camanche Spring. They got at the horses without being discovered, they laid to take over a fence. An occasional watch being kept up, the horses were missed within fifteen or twenty minutes after they were taken. The next morning the carcasses were discovered, leading to the Vega Trail. They cut off pursuit by leaving only a few miles, too wild to be easily caught.

It now remains to be seen whether the stipulations of the treaty will be faithfully carried out and the depredations and stolen property delivered up, and the Indians returned to their homes, and the peace and quiet on the frontier, and our citizens safe in consequence thereof. These fears are strengthened by the declaration of the warrior who was taken captive, and who had him in charge. He gave it as his opinion that the treaty was only entered into for the purpose of effecting his release, and that the Indians might look out for themselves as soon as they were returned to their homes. He promised to be with them when they come on upon our frontier. He has been sent home, and we may expect to hear from him soon, as he will be anxious to do some damage in his own way, and to obtain revenge upon his captives, and he will be anxious to do some damage in his own way, and to obtain revenge upon his captives, and he will be anxious to do some damage in his own way, and to obtain revenge upon his captives.
