

For the President: Mr. Editor—If the accompanying verses should be found worthy of a place in your column, send, by their publication, oblige one who is under every and deep personal obligations to the late Mr. J. W. Frost.

Very respectfully yours,
E. H. Moun, Jr.

When you will, for him who sleeps
Within the new made, silent tomb,
Where sorrow vigilantly keeps
Her crown, and thence the spot in gloom,
You look on worthy of each tear
Which falls and glazes on his bier.

His burning eyes, with genius fed,
Can never more impart its light;
Those lips, by eloquence inspired,
Which uttered thoughts divinely bright,
Are all hushed now—and never again
Can charm us with their wailing strain.

How oft, and well, has he honor'd
The cause of truth, and honor'd too.
If reason's voice was well nigh quelled—
His foremost was the recus'd fool,
And gallantly with error fought,
Until the victory was wrought.

But rarely has a friend been found,
More true than he, to those he loved;
Whose kindness they have often proved;
And still they love and will defend
The memory of their valued friend.

Rest, then, thou shade! in quiet rest—
Thy fame to many is full dear,
Thy memory is by numbers blest,
Thy grave we wish with many a tear,
And o'er it friends their vigils keep,
To guard and bless you while you sleep.

Murder of a Boat's Crew.—A correspondent of the New Bedford Mercury, under date of Hong Kong, April 20, gives the following particulars of the murder of a boat's crew attached to one of our American wharves, a brief mention of which has already been made.

On the 23d January, at an island not laid down on the charts, called by the whalers Kinglap, about 180 miles east of Annapolis, and a short distance from the Caroline Group, Captain Locke, of the bark Boy of Warren, with a boat's crew, were off by the natives. The boat had been on shore the day previous, without the natives showing any hostility. A second boat's crew was sent to endeavor to learn something of the fate of the captain and his boat's crew. They were attacked by the natives, and a white man from the shore was driven to leave, as the natives were bringing cutters from the other side of the island to take them. He also informed them that the captain and all the crew had been murdered. This account we received from one of the crew of the Boy. He also says that the natives were very friendly to the white man who was rescued. We have reported this affair to the commanding officer of our squadron in these waters.
