COTTON SEED MEAL FOR FEEDING.

Cotton-seed meal, now to be found in all markets, is the residue left after pressing the oil from the cotton-seed, ground for feed. The cotton-seed, as it comes from the gins, is covered with a hull or shell, which, in the upland variety, is clothed with a short down of cotton fibre. The seed makes more and better oil, and better feed, if deprived of this hull; nevertheless, there is, or has been, considerable seed pressed which has not been thus decorticated. There are several patented processes for this hulling or decortication. After pressing, the cake is ground for feed as we find it, and sold at considerably lower prices than those of linseed cake and meal. Its actual value for feeding purposes is considerably higher. Professor S. W.
Johnson, in a report made to the Connecticut State Agricultural Society, says: "Cotton-seed cake is much richer in oil and albuminous matter than the linseed cake. Three pounds of the cotton-seed cake are equivalent to four of linseed cake of average quality. The value of the article as a manure is obviously very considerable. The dung of cattle fed upon it will be greatly richer, both in nitrogen and phosphates, than that of animals fed on hay alone. Where stock is kept, probably the best manner of using the cake as a fertilizer is to feed it to the cattle, and carefully apply the manure they furnish. In this way, whatever is not economized as fat or flesh, will be available as manure."

On the same subject, an exchange says: "We have tested the soundness of these views from the laboratory, and have no doubt of their correctness. We overcame a prejudice in using the meal for feeding milk cows, and found it a very valuable article. All animals will not eat it at first. If it is not relished at once, it may be mixed in small quantities with corn-meal, and sprinkled with it over cut feed. The most reluctant animal will soon come to eat it greedily. We would use the meal in connection with both roots and hay in the winter, feeding not more than four quarts a day. It is said to be dangerous to feed it to young calves while living in part upon milk. There are well-attested cases upon record of its having killed them. It is well for stock raisers to be cautious. It is a safe article for cows, increases the flow of milk, and keeps them in good condition. It stands at the head of all kinds of fodder in producing manure rich in nitrogen. As the value of manure depends mainly upon the food from which it is made, farmers ought to look a good deal more sharply at this matter than they have been accustomed to doing."
