SOMEBODY'S BABY.

Sombody's baby went home to-day, And somebody grieved at the going; Sombody hoped it had come to stay, And somebody's tears are flowing.

Sombody longs for the wee form again, Only one moment to hold it; Sombody's baby would ease the heart-pain, Just once again to unfold it.

Sombody's arms are empty and free, Aimlessly, unceasingly; Sombody's trying so prayerfully, now, To stifle the lonely heart-crying.

Sombody's baby is glad it was born, Praising ring down through the ages; Sombody's baby knows little this morn, Now it knows more than the sages.

THAT CANTON CHINA.

Why Ass Thought It Incomplete Without Emma.

"One cup and saucer; one little red-edged plate; one bone-handled knife and fork; one silver spoon marked 'E. N.'; and worn thin with much usage. It did not take Emma Smith very long to clear away her breakfast-table.

"It does seem," said she, speaking aloud, presumably to the cat, "as if I grew poorer and poorer every day; I had a little butter with my oatmeal yesterday. To-day I haven't any. There's only a handful of potatoes left in the bin, and four apples and a few carrots. And I've no money. Yes, it's come to that. I've got to sell Aunt Desires' old blue Canton china."

As she uttered the words, a moisture came into her eyes which made the white crescent on her forehead glisten with water as if a high wind had swept over them.

No one would have believed that Emma Smith had once been the prettiest girl in Norvalton. Now and then a blue light would sparkle into her eyes, a faint flush of color would rise to her withered cheeks, which might recall the days of yore, but these came seldom. She was a dressmaker by trade, but she had somehow got out of fashion. People looked askance at her Paris plates, and doubted her ability to hang a skirt or cut a "surplice waist." The dashing "Madame" from New York got all the local custom. And there were times when Emma heartily wished that she had accepted Asa Hopper, instead of jeering at his suit.

She had scarcely packed up the blue Canton china set, in a dilapidated splint basket, when the sound of creaking wheels was heard, and Old Ma'am Perkins, seated on an aerial perch amid a bristling array of cracker and tin wares, driving a patient old horse who paid no sort of attention to shaken reins or belaboring whip, came in view. Emma ran out to intercept her.

"Want to buy any thing, Emma?" Emma Smith shook her head. "Mrs. Perkins," said she, "I'm wantin' to sell."

"The land! To sell what, Emma?" "Aunt Desires' old set of china. Real Canton. Flowin' blue. The hull set perfect, and not a chip nor a crack in it."

"What you want for it?" "I haint no idea what it's worth," sighed Emma. "Any thing'll bring."

"Wal, hand it up here, an' I'll dew my level best for ye," said Old Ma'am Perkins. "I'm goin' down Bexford way, this trip, and some one may take a fancy to it."

It was late in the April twilight when the creakery cart once more stopped at the door. Emma ran out to greet the cheerful old woman who sat on it.

"Wal," cried Old Ma'am, "I sold it!" "Did you?" Emma had cherished an illogical, lingering sort of hope that the blue china might prove unsalable, and thus come back to her after all.

"And who'd ye guess bought it? Asa Hopper, up to the Brook Farm."

"Asa Hopper?" "Folks say he's going to be married," said Old Ma'am Perkins. "Anyhow, he's furnished up the house real slick, with a new red carpet on the best room, and new wall paper, and Nottingham lace curtains. Had property left him from the Fairfield County Hoppers," added Old Ma'am. "Says he: 'Seems to me that china looks sort o' natural!'"

And she: "I wouldn't wonder if you'd took tea off it before now. It belongs to Emma Smith, the dressmaker down in Norvalton," says I, "and she ain't so well off as she was, and she wants to sell it."

Says he: "How much'll ye take for it?" Says I: "Twenty-five dollars, (for I thought there wa'n't no use a-sellin' it for nothing). Says he: "I'll take it!"

As here the money all in gold, in a shabby leather purse, in the bottom of my pocket.

And away she drove, chuckling to herself.

Emma Smith went back into the dreary room, lighted her candle, and set herself to work to apportion this unexpected fall to her various debts, and deficiencies; and through it all her heart was as heavy as lead.

"It's nothing to me that Asa Hopper is going to be married," said she to herself. "He's a real good fellow, and I'm sure I hope he'll do well. But—but I didn't s'pose he'd have forgot me so soon."

And a big round tear, like a miniature soap bubble, plashed down on the little heap of gold pieces.

As Miss Emma Smith coughed up to Miss Desires' in a cracked tumbler, at the back of the dresser shelf, she saw, standing there, a stocky little cream pitcher with the inevitable Chinese on the badly fore-shortened bridge, traced in flowing blue lines on its apocryptic sides.

"There!" said she, "I forgot to send that cream pitcher with the rest. I'm sorry I don't know how it ever came here."

Just then there came a knock at the door. Miss Smith had nearly dropped the pitcher in the start she gave. She went to the door, and there stood Asa Hopper himself.

"Good evening, Emma," said he, just exactly as if ten years had not elapsed since their last meeting.

"Good evening, Asa!" said the dressmaker. "I know what you came for. Sit down."

"You do, eh?" Asa turned very red and diligently dashed the inside of his hat with his silk handkerchief.

"You've come for that blue pitcher that belongs to your set, and here it is."

"No, I haint," said Asa Hopper, paying no heed to the article of household ware extended to him. "I've come for you, Emma."

"For—me?" "Yes, just that." Asa Hopper laid his hat on the table and put his handkerchief back into his pocket in a business-like way. "Now look here. You're alone in the world—so be I. And all these years since we were young together I've been thinkin' of you and no one else. I'm well-to-do in the world, and I can keep my wife like a lady—and for a year back I've been sort o' furnishin' up my house and sayin' to myself: 'This 'ere carpet's a pattern Emma would like,' and 'Them blue-painted cheeks would match Emma's eyes to a charm.' And the house is ready—and I'm ready—and when Old Mrs. Perkins brought along the Canton china set and said you wanted to sell it, I knowed the call had come. Be you ready, too, Emma?"

Emma colored, and still she smiled. It was not exactly the way in which she had pictured her future wooing, yet there was genuine love in Asa's eyes, and a sprit of "dead-in-earnest" breathing through all his words!

"Yes," said she. "I am ready!" "Then give me a kiss, Emma," said the jubilant lover, jumping up, "just to seal the bargain."

"Oh, take care! you'll break the cream pitcher," said Emma.

"Hang the cream pitcher," said Asa, and he got the kiss first, after all.

"But did you really love me all these years?" asked Emma, coyly. "Didn't you never pay attention to no other girl?"

"Never," said Asa. "All my money was laid up for you, and that there house was furnished for you. And if you hadn't come there to live, no other woman should, not until the day of my death."

Emma Smith's heart gave a little upward pulse. He was awkward, and loose-jointed, and red-haired, this swain of hers, but among all the knights of King Arthur's Round Table there dwelt no more chivalrous spirit than his!

And they were married, and Old Ma'am Perkins came to the wedding in a glistening black silk gown, and they ate the wedding dinner off the Canton china set, and it is fair to conclude that they lived happy ever after. Is there any reason that they shouldn't? Need extreme youth be always a necessary element to happiness?—Amy Randolph, in N. Y. Ledger.

LOST AFFECTIONS.

Good News For Wives Who Are Suffering From the Pangs of Jealousy.

For many years husbands in this country have been bringing suits against men for alienating the affections of their wives. In many cases they have secured sums of money for the lost love of one woman that would enable them to secure the affections of twenty more.

The pecuniary value of the affections of a married woman as determined in a court of justice is variable, and appears to depend much on the youth and beauty of the female and the wealth of the party against whom an action is brought.

In a few of the States have actions been brought by wives against women to recover damages for alienating the affections of their husbands. But such a case was brought in New York, decided in favor of the wife, and taken to the court of appeals. The justices united in declaring that by the common law a wife could not bring such an action or sue in her own name. They were divided on the question of the statutory right, but a majority decided that it existed. Justice Vann, in delivering the opinion of the court, said:

"At the wrong of the wife are the same in principle and are caused by acts of the same nature as those of the husband, the remedy should be the same. Why should he have a right of action for the loss of his society? Does he not seek the protection of the law in this respect at least as much as she does?"

"Will the law give its aid to him and withhold it from her?"

This is good news for poor wives whose husbands' affections have been alienated by rich widows and spinsters and giddy young girls who have property in their own right. It is also good news for poor lawyers, as it has opened up a new and promising line of business for them. Rich women who flirt with husbands now may have to pay dearly for the sport. A case is now on trial in New York City in which the plaintiff claims that her husband's affections, stolen from her by a brazen widow, were worth to her $50,000 in cash.

The most difficult thing the courts will have to determine is the money value of a husband's affections. The worth of most things is ascertained by the market quotations on a given day. But conjugal affection is a commodity new to the trade, and its market value has not been fixed. It may be difficult to decide on its exact worth. Courts may declare that it depends on its quality, its quantity, its lasting character or its scarcity. Courts are not run by sentiment. A judgment is always rendered for a certain sum of money.

Now that wedded bliss is to have a money value given to it, there seems to be good reasons for organizing companies to insure it to the possessor. An engaged girl could take out a policy on the affections of her proposed husband, and by that means secure a liberal sum in the event of their being lost or stolen. Such a policy might be more desirable than one on the life of a husband, and love is more uncertain than life. A wife who has insured her husband's affections in a strong company would have something to soothe her in hours of affliction.—Chicago Herald.

—The recent fashionable craze for Eastern interior decoration is rooms furnished with Eastern couches and draperies. To satisfy the taste, the bazaars and bazaars in Paris, Turkey, Egypt and Arabia have been laid under contribution. The general effect sought is one of voluptuous luxury, and the effects of the draperies are brought out in perfection by shutting off gas and electric light and introducing oil lamps, shaded by soft colored silks, wrought into fanciful shapes.

—A seventy-year-old Jew of Rochester, N. Y., recently wrote from Jerusalem that he wanted a collection taken up to enable him to return home. With $1,000 he had received for injuries sustained in jumping from the second story of a burning flour-mill in which he was employed he went to Jerusalem, believing that one day that city would be the center of the Jewish population on earth. He had consumed five months in reaching his destination, and had spent all his money.

—There are many Americans, says Edward Everett Hale, "who forget, or perhaps never knew, there are in this country towns and villages where, practically speaking, there is no criminal class, and no class of paupers. The house of correction in many a country in America is empty half the time. There is many a poor-house in New England where they take summer boarders because they have no one else to take."

—The record on salmon catching in English waters the past season shows a falling off in size and number from previous years. There were many catches, however, of fish weighing from forty to sixty pounds.

A TRIAL in the harbor of Portsmouth, Eng., recently showed that a modern torpedo boat can mount any boom yet devised to protect a roadstead or harbor. The structure tested it was supposed to would instantly stop and hold fast any boat attempting to pass it, but the boat, driven at full speed, went over without difficulty or damage.

A NOVELTY is announced in the shape of a "recording and alarm" compass which it is declared will greatly increase the safety of vessels. The apparatus is said to be composed of a binnacle and recording and alarm instruments connected by electric wires. The principle, in brief, is to sound an alarm whenever the course is not kept.

At Kansas City recently it was announced that Thomas A. Edison would deliver an address, though he was thousands of miles away. One of his improved phonographs was set in operation, and, though it did not deliver an address, it spoke the inventor's apology for not having prepared one, and spoke so loud that every word was heard distinctly throughout the hall.

Women love strong men. A weak man may excite their sympathy and a woman's careful tenderness soothes and softens the ruggedness of his heart. They will laugh, joyous, warm, exuberant love of women dear, belongs to the men that are strong and true except in the spring. Why then feel weak and mean and nervous and prostrated in the spring time when life of one woman that thrilling buoyancy even the vegetable world has been sluggish blood, inactive organic functions, rusty joints and general weakness to make your life miserable simply because the long winter has restrained your natural activity? It need not be. If only you will use that glorious and incomparable botanical purifier known as B. B. B. or Botanic Blood Balm, your health in spring time will be all that you can wish. Try it this spring. Try it now.

P. A. Shepherd, Norfolk, Va., August 10, 1888, writes: "I depend on B. B. B. for the preservation of my health. I have had it in my family now nearly two years, and in that time have not had a doctor."

Love, that has nothing but beauty to keep it in good health, is short-lived and apt to have a rueful fate.

How to Grow Beautiful.

She knew it was necessary to become beautiful in order to be considered attractive. She felt it wiser to be plump and hearty than to be thin and delicate. To this end she took a course in the use of Carter's Little Liver Pills, which she had suffered from backaches, headaches and bearing down pains, and was restless until she found the medicine she needed. It improved her appetite and digestion. Her habits became regular. Her flesh increased and became more firm and solid. Her complexion became clear and beautiful, and free from pimples. Her lips grew red and her cheeks grew rosy. She did not know an ache or pain. Exercise gave her pleasure, and she became the life of her companions. She could ride a tricycle for many miles and never seemed to grow weary. In exchanging an opinion with the young men she loved her. She is now a happy wife and mother. Who was she? Well, you know the medicine she used. With her pleasure, sweet girl. She used Dr. John Bull's Sarsaparilla. If any there be among you who are sick, go quickly and do likewise.—Mansfield Independent.

Deafness Can't Be Cured by local applications, as they can not reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a humming sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, deafness is the result, and it may be permanent. Only the best medicine can cure it, and that is Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.
