FARM NOTES FROM L. S. U.

How to Grow and Select Good Seed Corn.

The New Pig Club Movement for Boys.

Intense Cultivation of Crops and Feeding.

GOOD SEED CORN.

(V. L. Roy)

It has been estimated that a bushel of first-class seed corn is worth $25; that is, it will on a given acreage produce $25 worth of corn more than will seed picked out in the crib. A well-bred productive strain of corn should increase the yield of an acre of corn by about 10 bushels. We can not, however, expect so large an increase in production from varieties now bred in Louisiana; yet, the better bred corn of the State is far superior for planting purposes to the general run of crib corn now so extensively used for seed.

This is an argument against the too common practice of picking corn out of the crib for planting. In this case it is impossible for the farmer to tell what sort of better plant produced the ear. As in the case of animals, it is important in plant breeding to know something of the ancestry of the seed to be used. How, then, should the farmer select his seed corn?

First, it should be done in the field when the corn husks begin to dry. Desirable ears should be marked by tying a red rag string around the ear. A desirable stalk is the one that grows where the stand is regular; it should not be too tall, should bear a good ear in the pride of life, with ears near the middle, should be large at the base and taper towards the top, should stand erect and have good brace roots, and it should have from 14 to 18 big broad leaves. The husk should cover the tip of the ear completely, and the shank should be long and small enough to insure the ear's drooping when dry.

At harvest time, the marked ears should be thrown into a box tied to the body of the wagon, so as to keep them separate from the general supply. The seeds should be husked as soon after gathering time as possible, and from the lot a sufficient supply of the best ears selected for planting the following year. This corn should be protected against weevils, and stored away from rats and mice.

It is best not to plant cowpeas on the plot from which seed corn is to be selected, as the vines greatly increase the labor and difficulty of the selection. On this plot may be spread farm manure to make up for the loss of peas. For further information concerning the selection of seed corn growing send to V. L. Roy, Louisiana State University, Baton Rouge, La., for Farmers' Library Circular No. 1.

THE NEW PIG CLUB MOVEMENT.

In several parishes of the State the scope of the boys' agricultural club work has been expanded, and already several corn club managers have arranged for the boys to raise pigs and to hold a pig show in the fall. Along this new line of work considerable progress has been made in Ouachita and Caddo parishes. Prof. J. W. Carpenter, of Calhoun, reports 30 boys in Ouachita raising pigs; and Mr. E. W. Jones, of Shreveport, has about 50 boys on his list. In Ouachita, the boys are required to raise pure-bred pigs, registered or subject to registration. In Caddo, the boys select their own pigs, either registered, grade or scrub. The Ouachita plan will be the means of introducing, within a year or two, hundreds of pure-bred hogs into the parish. The Caddo plan will demonstrate to the boys and farmer that the razorback and scrub cannot compete with the well-bred hog.

The Ouachita pig contest will take place at Calhoun, December 1, 1911. At this show, first, second and third premiums will be offered for the following, to-wit:

Best developed gilts, 8 months or under.
Best sows, with litters.
Best boars, 8 months or under.
Best barrows, 8 months or under.
Best spayed gilt, 8 months or under.
Best records of profits on one hog.

In a circular issued by Mr. Carpenter, it is stated that the Ouachita pig club has been organized as a result of a belief that north Louisiana is capable of becoming one of the greatest hog-raising sections in the world; and it is felt that no better plan can be devised for promoting the hog industry than the addition of this feature to the boys' agricultural club movement. This work should result in spreading a great deal of the most valuable information on the feeding, care and management of growing pigs; and on breeding. Mr. Jones, in a letter to the boys, said: "You must feed and attend your pig personally. The object of the contest is to learn something about hogs, and to see who can raise the best one in nine months." More than $300 has been subscribed in Caddo for premiums to the boys who are engaged in raising corn and growing pigs. Mr. A. E. Glassell, owner of his enterprise and interest in all phases of boys' club work, has taken a very active part in raising funds for boys' premiums in Caddo.

One feature of the raising of pigs that should appeal to the boys is the fact that there is money in it. If a boy can afford to start out with a registered gilt and breed her to a pure-bred boar of the same breed, he should be able to sell the pigs at fancy prices. In this work, the boys should be encouraged by their parents, and not treated like the corn club boys who in 1909 was despoiled by his father of the acre of land that he had labored for weeks to clear and put in shape for cultivation.

If any boys in parishes where no pig club has been organized desire to undertake the raising of a pig, they are invited to write to Prof. V. L. Roy, Baton Rouge, La., who will gladly render any assistance he can.

INTENSE CULTIVATION OF CROPS.

So far as crop production is concerned, the great needs of Southern agriculture are deeper and better-prepared seed beds, more humus in the soil, better drainage, improved seed, and a more intelligent and intense system of cultivation. Whether growing cotton against the ravages of the weevil, producing corn or what not, the manner in which we cultivate our crops should receive more attention.

The cultivation of crops has several purposes: to keep down or destroy weeds; maintain a soil mulch so as to save moisture; open the upper layer of ground to give the air freer access to the roots and to the food in the soil which it helps to render available to the plants; and enable the soil to absorb more readily any needed rainfall.

For the most part, the cultivation of crops is a laborious and more than two inches deep. Except during prolonged rainy spells, it is safe to say that when the cultivation or working of a crop is done in such a way as to tear or cut away the roots of the growing plants, the crop is injured thereby. In this work of root destruction the turning plow is man's chief weapon, although other implements too may work damage. For the cultivation of crops, cultivators should be used; the plow is not a cultivator. If the plow must be used when it can injure the plants, it should be driven as shallow as possible.

During the period of cultivation of a crop, it should be worked at least every ten days. The best soil mulch settles in about ten days, and the lands begin to lose moisture rapidly if the soil is not covered. During more than two inches deep. Except during prolonged rainy spells, it is safe to say that when the cultivation or working of a crop is done in such a way as to tear or cut away the roots of the growing plants, the crop is injured thereby. In this work of root destruction the turning plow is man's chief weapon, although other implements too may work damage. For the cultivation of crops, cultivators should be used; the plow is not a cultivator. If the plow must be used when it can injure the plants, it should be driven as shallow as possible.
