TOMATO WILT.

The most common disease in the garden and truck field is what we call "Southern tomato wilt." It is not a blight as some call it. Blight is a disease which attacks the plants from the outer surface of the leaves and stems, causing the plant to shed all leaves and the partial decay of stem. Wilt is caused by another kind of germ or bacteria. This germ is what we might call a parasite as it attaches itself to the roots of the tomato plant to grow and as the fungus develops it sends a network of very small roots up into the main stalk of the plant and in doing so the small water and plant food carrying vessels and tubes are clogged. It not only stops the rise of moisture but cuts off the soluble plant food which is necessary to all plant life. One can readily see that spraying will not check or control this disease as the seat of trouble is beyond the reach of any spraying solution. The only way to eradicate this disease from the garden or field is to follow up a long series of crop rotation and to take pains and see that no crop is allowed to grow on infected land that will support the fungus. Several different crops are easily killed by this dreaded parasite and it might be well to name them, such as tomatoes, egg plant, peppers, Irish potatoes and sometimes water melons. These crops should not be grown on infected land for a period of five years. Other crops that do not have the disease can be grown in the meantime. Corn, peas, beans, sweet potatoes, squash, cucumbers and some few other crops do not have this trouble at all. By growing crops immune to fungus the germ will finally be starved out of the soil. Especially if lime and potash salts are used liberally. All infected plants should be immediately pulled up and burned as they spread the spores of the fungus all over the garden, when dry. Wind, insects or any thing else coming in touch with the dead dry vines will spread the disease. This is why it is very important to burn all plants dying. Do not wait till plant is completely dead but pull it up as soon as you see indications of plant wilt.

The department has been trying to breed a tomato that could be called wilt proof and some improvement has been made but it will be year before there will be seed on the market. All we can do now is to take the proper precaution and try to hold the disease in check, even if we do not get rid of it entirely.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

W. T. K., Blood: I have some on land and I would like to plant it in Spanish peanuts. Is it too late to plant at this time? How should they be planted?

Spanish peanuts can be planted from May up to the 15th day of July. The best time for planting, however in my opinion, is about the middle of June. This date of planting will bring the peanuts to maturity in latter part of 8-September when they are so not so apt to sprout and come up so quick. Then at that time of year the hogs will need some grazing very badly and the patch can be fenced off and pigs turned in. The ground should be flat broken and harrowed well, then rows laid off three feet apart with 8-inch corn shovels. Two hundred pounds of bone meal should go in this furrow and mixed up with soil. The peanuts should then be planted. When these little water carrying vessels and tubes are clogged it not only stops the rise of moisture but cuts off the soluble plant food which is necessary to all plant life. One can readily see that spraying will not check or control this disease as the seat of trouble is beyond the reach of any spraying solution. The only way to eradicate this disease from the garden or field is to follow up a long series of crop rotation and to take pains and see that no crop is allowed to grow on infected land that will support the fungus. 'Twas on a trip

On board a ship,
A gentleman met some maids,
But who'd be choose
Or which would lose
Was what had each maid afraid

Before he reached his landing place
Behold he met another face
To her he turned, the others spurned
Alas! poor maids, such is the case
When next you see him on the street
Perhaps another face you'll greet

"GET THE HABIT" is a slang phrase, but it is excellent advice when applied to the habit of "saving."

Our advice to those who have a desire to get a start in the world is to have a "savings" account and to "get the habit" of depositing regularly a part of your earnings.
