DISTRICT COURT

If your honor pleases, and gentlemen of the bar:

As this day passes to the memory of Judge Lancaster, I have but a small thought, but at the same time I should like to drop it amongst the grasses that blow over him now. I feel that whatever place he takes in the history of men who lived and became prominent in this community that such place stands among the unconquered. That we are not in position at this time, nor is it our privilege, to pass upon his work. He came to his own late in life after a passage through many storms. His was a usefulness that was proven only by the glimpse of which came to us through the open door of the future, and at the time of his death we all know this door stood widely ajar. I was always forcibly reminded whenever I saw Judge Lancaster making his fight against the sternest odds with life and disappointment, of William Ernest Henley's "Invictus" - the young gray-haired man who placed his faith in the fight for a better day to come.

"Dark as the night that covers me, Black as the pit from pole to pole; I thank whatever gods, may be, For my unconquerable soul."

In the fell clutch of circumstance, I have not winced, nor cried aloud; In all the bludgeonings of chance, My head is bloody, but unbowed.

It matters not how straight the gate, Nor charged with punishments the scroll, I am the master of my fate, I am the captain of my soul!

The love of youth and its influence on life, never wholly left his even in the hour of his greatest trials. His last hours ate was a bit of jocular swagger amongst his fellows. His camaraderie was good. His offices always benevolent, and he believed in the greatest "man-doctrine" ever preached, and that is, instant salvation for him who lays down his life for his friend. He met the shadow standing, and with a firm grasp of his staff. As he journeyed out with the ungrateful, well might he have adapted the epiphany, which Robert Louis Stevenson argued so eloquently for himself:

Under the wide and starry sky, Dig the grave and let me lie, Glad did I live, and gladly die, And I laid me down with a will.

This be the verse ye grave for me, "Here he lies, where he longed to be; Home is the sailor, home from the sea, And the hunter, home from the hill."

Mr. B. M. Miller then addressed the Court. He stated that this was the second time in the history of this Judicial District that the Bar had met to pass resolutions to the memory of a Judge who had died while holding office - the former occasion being after the death of Judge James M. Thompson, in 1903.

He spoke of the fact that Judge Carter and he had completed the trial of a case before Judge Lancaster only a few hours before his death and of the shock sustained by the community and especially the Bar by his sudden taking off.

Judge Lancaster's death, he said was especially to be regretted because it was apparent that he was increasing in wisdom and growing in judicial stature, from day to day.

Referring to Judge Lancaster as a judge, the speaker said his marked characteristics were the industry and patience with which he investigated the questions presented, and the strong sense of fairness and impartiality which caused him to strive always to do justice between litigants, no matter who they might be.

As a man, he said, he was positive, outspoken and fearless in his attitude on every question in which he was interested, and no one ever had a doubt as to how he stood, nor was he ever known to "crook the pregnant hinges of the knee that might might follow fawning."

Mr. Miller also said that Judge Lancaster was a sincere and consistent Christian, and that his broad sense of humanity and his fatherly interest in young men brought before him on criminal charges were conspicuous traits in his character.

In conclusion, he said that the lawyers had lost a genial and sincere friend, and the public a just and upright judge.

At the conclusion of Mr. Miller's remarks, Mr. Arthur L. Bear moved that the resolutions of the Bar be spread on the minutes of the Court. This motion was duly seconded by Mr. Neuhouser, of Mandeville, who concluded the memorial proceedings with fitting remarks.

Judge Carter, in responding to the addresses of the attorneys, said:

"That no one felt more keenly the shock than I did of the sudden death of Judge Lancaster; than only three hours before I was engaged in the trial of a case and left him with a friendly wave of the hand. I am safe in saying that I have known Judge Lancaster for more than thirty years, and it is with a great humility that I have taken on the mantle as presiding justice of this District, so ably worn by Judge Reed, Judge Thompson and Judge Burns, and it is my only hope that at the close of my term of office that the people of St. Tammany parish will be able to voice the same sentiments of regard which have been uttered by the attorneys in their addresses this morning."

"It is therefore ordered that all business now pending in this court be continued automatically until tomorrow, and that the court, today will stand adjourned out of respect to the memory of Judge Lancaster."

The grand jury has been in session all week, but the only indictments brought into court was that of E. D. Kentzel, former secretary of the police jury. He is charged in two counts, one for the embezzlement of $25.00, and one for the embezzlement of $2000. Mr. Kentzel had left for New Orleans, Thursday, but hearing that a true bill had been brought against him returned home on the 7 o'clock train and had his bond fixed up.

When the organizers of the Bank of Covington paid in the modest sum of $15,000 as capital stock, little did they dream that their institution would grow to have assets of more than SEVEN HUNDRED THOUSAND DOLLARS. This remarkable record was made possible by the fact that the Bank has always been under the control of Directors who were men of good business acumen and officers whose first aim was to see that the Bank did succeed.

There is never a time when our Bank is not in position to finance its patrons on good business propositions.

SAVES DOCTOR BILLS

It's Worms, Doctor, I Feel 'EM CRAWLIN'

A Doctor With Plenty Of 'HORSE SENSE'

IT GOT THE WORMS I am giving BLACKMAN'S MEDICATED SALT BRICK to males and find it the best stock remedy I have ever used. One mule was so bad she could hardly go and she took very freely of it and worms came in wads as large as her ears. I had two more mules I was thinking of clipping and I commenced using the MEDICATED SALT BRICK, and instead of having to clip them they shed off and got as fat as a butter ball. It is the best stock remedy that I know of. Three of the bricks will last a horse 90 days and he gets his salt as nature calls for it, three times a day and it also physic him.
