Tattersall's.
We wonder what are the speculations of a foreigner who reads for the first time in an English newspaper.

DERBY.
12 to 1 Fast Blink Bonny.
12 to 1 Fast Blink Bonny.

Be he as learned in numbers as the late celebrated Mr. Cock, the problem may puzzle him—12-1 = Blink Bonny! Impossible? He must imagine it an excerpt from the mystifying pages of "Bad-shaw," or the equally confounding tables of cab-fares issued by the Commissioners of Police. But to an Englishman what associations are awakened by those magic words! Frying on the plains of India, freezing with a Canadian winter, tossing on the vasty deep, or "cribbed, confined" on the rock of Gibraltar, the wizard memory calls up before him Epsom and the Derby Day; the road with its endless variety of vehicle and person; the Downs again, like a meteor of many colors, seen and lost in a moment; the cheer that hails the winner; the volley of champagne corks that tells the advent of the welcome luncheon; the ride home, never distinctly remembered—all are there again. Or perhaps he is once more in the grand Old Forest of Royal Windsor, on the Ascent Cup Day—the Ladies' Race Day, when more beauty may be seen in four short hours than all the world outside of England could produce in a decade of years; when the gipsy makes her harvest, gathering her silver crop from hands white as ivory, whilst laughing listeners half believe the patter of the coming Roulette. And then the ride home in the still evening with Epsom whips making the sweetest part of his dream—a dream perhaps, never to be realized! Or else, if he be deeper lover of the horse, admitting no rival in his heart, what a string of "old loves" passes in review before him! The Flying Dutchman, Friam, Mameluke, Zingane, Surplice, Emilius, Cadland, The Colonel, Daniel O'Rourke, Foig-a-ballagh, and many more that we care to enumerate. Or, perhaps, Tattersall's—"that word of power"— brings him again to the cover side, where every man is either a friend or a neighbor, and where he recognizes many a noble horse bought at "The Corner" as a price which would have purchased almost a German Ducky.

Though "Tattersall's" is familiar to most Englishmen as a household word, there are many even in London who have never visited it. If you take a walk down Cumberland-place you will see, at the southeast end of St. George's Hospital, an archway which leads to Tattersall's, or, as it is called emphatically, "The Corner." Some "varnished" looking gent, all learned in horsemanship, surround the Turf Tap—the first building on your left—and are busy discussing the merits and chances of the entries for some coming race. These are outside betters of horse-dealers, who have not the entry to the Subscription-room, which is the next building over the left. In the evening some of the inclose a grass-plot used for the trial of horses sent for sale. The Subscription room was designed by Mr. George Tattersall, the well-known author of "Stable Architecture." It is capable of holding four hundred persons, and is well ventilated and lighted. A number of desks placed in an octagonal form occupy the centre of the room, and on the walls you see portraits of Eclipse and other great winners. Eclipse hangs over the fireplace; and by the side, lists of races to come, declarations of weights, and other racing information. There is also a portrait of the late Lord George Bentinck, a nobleman to whom the sporting world must be ever largely indebted. This room, though it in-closes a grass-plot used for the trial of horses sent for sale. The Subscription room was designed by Mr. George Tattersall, the well-known author of

the walls you see portraits of Eclipse and other great winners. Eclipse hangs over the fireplace;
and by the side, lists of races to come, declarations
of weights, and other racing information. There is also a portrait of the late Lord George Bentinck,
