

THE POLYNESIAN.

SATURDAY, APRIL 25, 1863.

Old Times and New.

When I was young, crime was crime—it had no other name; And when 'twas proved against a man, he had to bear the blame. They called the man who stole, a thief—they wanted no fine feeling; What folks call petty larceny, in my day was called stealing. They did not make a reproach the theme of song and story, As if the bloodier were his hands, the brighter was his glory. And when a murder had been done, could they the murderer find, They hung him as they would a crow, a terror to mankind. But now-a-days it seems to me, whenever blood is spilled, The murderer has sympathy proportioned to his guilt. And when the law has proved a man to be a second Cain, A dozen jurors will be found to bring him in insane. And then petitions will be signed, and texts of scripture twisted, And every effort will be made to have the law resisted, Until the man who proved to be as bloodthirsty as Nero, Will walk abroad like other men, only a greater hero. When I was young if a man had failed, he shut up house and all, And never ventured out at night, if he ventured out at all. And his wife sold all her China plates, and his son came home from college, And his girl left school, and learned to wash and bake and such like knowledge. They gave up cakes and pumpkin pies, and had the plainest eating. And never asked folks home to tea, and scarcely went to meeting; The man that was a bankrupt called was rather shunned of men, And hardly dared to show his head among his townfolk then. But now-a-days when a merchant fails, they say he makes a penny, His wife don't have a gown the less, and his daughters just as many; His sons do smoke their choice cigars, and drink their costly wine, His wife goes to the opera, and he has folks to dine. He walks the street, he drives his gig, men show him all civilities, And what in my day were called debts, are now called liabilities; They call the man unfortunate who ruins half the city, In my day it was his creditors to whom we gave the pity.

Extraordinary Military Movement—An Army on Skates!

During the famous expedition of Louis XIV., this art of locomotion was used against the Dutch themselves in one of the most curious and daring exploits recorded in history. When the States sued for peace, the terms offered by the pride of Louis were so monstrous, that the people tore open their sluices and laid the country under water. The frost, after a time, however, rendered even this unavailing; and at length Gen. Luxembourg, one dark and freezing night, mounted 12,000 men on skates, and sent them over the ice from Utrecht to surprise the Hague. The result is given as follows, by a writer who takes his fact from a French historian: When they left Utrecht, it was clear, frosty weather, and the effect of the moon and stars upon the even sheet of ice, over which they swept like a breeze, was truly magical. By degrees, as they advanced, the visible horizon of earth was obscured by vapor, and they could see nothing around above or beneath them, but a circular expanse of ice, bounded at the edge by thick gray clouds, and canopied by the stary curtain of the sky. The strange growling sound that ever and anon boomed along the frozen wilderness had at first something impressively terrific to the imagination; and as it died fitfully away in the distance, the space surrounding them seemed extended almost to infinity. Their sky was at length gradually covered by the vapors rising, as if from the edge of the circle of earth; a veil of dull haze white overspread the heavens and obscured the stars; and a dim round spot of watery brightness was the only indication of the site of the moon, by which alone they could now steer their course. A rapid thaw had now come on; their skates sunk deeper and deeper into the ice at every step; and at last the water gathering upon the surface, as it was agitated by the night wind that had now risen, assumed the appearance of a sea. The wind increased; the sky grew blacker and blacker; their footing became spongy and insecure, and the ice groaned and cracked beneath them; they plunged almost to the knee. Every one looked upon himself as lost; and the horrors of a fate hitherto untold in story, appearing to belong neither to the fortunes of the land nor of the sea, appalled the boldest imagination.

At length a faint, twinkling light appeared in the distance, sometimes seen and sometimes lost in the varying atmosphere; and they had the satisfaction, such as it was, of at least knowing the relative bearing of the place on which they were about to perish. The light proceeded from a strong fort in the hands of the enemy, impenetrable without cannon; and, what added bitterness to their misery, was the certain knowledge that beyond this fort was a dike, which in all probability afforded a path, however narrow and muddy, by which they could have returned to Utrecht. The fort, however, was the only gate to this avenue of safety; and even if they had possessed the requisite means of siege, if it was defended for a single day, they would either be swallowed up by the water in the continuance of the thaw, or perish miserably through cold and fatigue. But anything was better than inaction. The water insidiously around them was a deadlier enemy than stone walls or cannon shot; and they determined at least to make a rush upon the immovable masonry of the fort, and provoke the fire of its defenders. It is impossible to account for the result. It may have been that the sight of so large a body of men rushing in upon them, and as if from the open sea, their numbers multiplied, and even their individual forms distorted and magnified in the mist, struck a panic of terror into the hearts of the garrison; while this may have been increased by the shouts of courage or despair booming widely over the icy waste and mingling like the voices of demons with the rising wind. But however this was, the gates of the fort opened at their approach, and the hapless and half-brown adventurers rushed in without striking a blow.

GOOD IN EVERYTHING.—One day Father Madeleine saw some country people very busy pulling up nettles; he looked at the heap of plants, uprooted, and already wilted, and said: "This is dead; but it would be well if we knew how to put it to some use. When the nettle is young, the leaves make excellent greens; when it grows old it has filaments and fibres like hemp and flax. Cloth made from the nettle is worth as much as that made from hemp. Chopped up, the nettle is good for poultry; pounded, it is good for horned cattle. The seed of the nettle mixed with the fodder of animals gives a lustre to their skin; the root, mixed with salt, produces a beautiful yellow dye. It makes, moreover, excellent hay, as it can be cut twice in a season. And what does the nettle need! Very little soil, no care, no culture; except that the seeds fall as fast as they can ripen, and it is difficult to gather them; that is all. If we would take a little pains, the nettle would be useful; we neglect it, and it becomes harmful. Then we kill it. How much men are like the nettle!" After a short silence he added: "My friends, remember this, that there are no bad herbs, and no bad men; there are only bad cultivators."—Les Miserables.

"I stand upon the soil of freedom," cried a sturdy orator. "No," exclaimed his hearer, "you stand in a pair of boots that have never been paid for!"

MADAME VAN SCHAIK'S CAT AND RATS.—The anger of an Amsterdam lady was recently caused by the mischance of Myneber Diederich, a zealous member of one of the volunteers rifle corps of the flat but handsome city, who, when practicing at a target, unluckily shot the cat of Madame Van Schaike. Though full of rage and grief at the loss of her favorite, and bent upon revenge, the lady was anxious not to do or say anything that could implicate her husband in the affair, reading least a duel between the two gentlemen might be the result, and accordingly determined to avenge on Madame Diederich the death of the unfortunate animal. She therefore sent private orders to her husband's foreman—Mynheer Van Schaike is one of the most extensive shipowners of the city—desiring him to have the holds of their ships searched for rats, and to send her fifty of the finest specimens of those creatures that he could succeed in causing to be taken alive. The order was promptly executed, and the rats, safely shut up in a large chest, were despatched by the bereaved frau to the country house whither the Diederichs had betaken themselves for the summer. The chest reached its destination in safety, arriving just as the owners of the place were enjoying the beauty of a lovely summer evening. Madame Diederich, who was expecting a box of dresses from town, and supposing the chest to contain the looks for finery, caused it to be brought into the dining-room and opened under her own eyes. Her "feelings" when the lid was raised and the avenging army leaped forth from the ambush, may be imagined. Nailed to the under side of the lid was these words: MADAME—Your husband has killed my cat. I have the honor of sending you my rats. Yours, etc., ADELA VAN SCHAIKE.

PROFESSIONAL TACT.—A wealthy lady had a tickling in her throat, and thought that a bristle of her tooth brush had gone down and lodged in her gut. Her throat daily grew worse. It was highly inflammable, and she sent for the family doctor. He examined it carefully, and finally assured her that nothing was the matter—it was a mere nervous delusion, he said. Still her throat troubled her, and she became so much alarmed that she was sure that she would die. A friend suggested that she should call in Dr. Jones, a young man just commencing practice. She objected at first, but finally consented. He was a person of good address and polite manners. He looked carefully at her throat, asked her several questions as to the sensation at the seat of the alarming malady, and finally stated that he thought he could relieve her. On his second visit he brought with him a delicate pair of forceps, in the teeth of which he had inserted a bristle taken from an ordinary tooth-brush. The rest can be imagined. The lady threw back her head; the forceps were introduced in her mouth, a pick—a loud scream! and 'twas all over; and the young physician, with a smiling face, was holding up to the light and inspecting with lively curiosity the extracted bristle. "The patient was in raptures; immediately recovered her health and spirits, and went about everywhere sounding the praise of "her savior," as she persisted in calling the dexterous operator.

THE MONEY VALUE OF CIVILITY.—Civility is a virtue in itself, for a courteous man always is a favorite in life, and that, even, when persons of ability sometimes fail. The famous Duke of Marlborough is a case in point. It was said of him by a contemporary, that his agreeable manners often converted an enemy into a friend; and, by another, that it was more pleasing to be denied a favor by His Grace than to receive one from other men. The gracious manners of Charles James Fox preserved him from personal dislike, even when he was politically the most unpopular man in the kingdom. The history of our own country is full of examples of success obtained by civility. The recall of every man furnishes, if he will but recall the past, frequent instances where conciliatory manners have made the fortunes of physicians, lawyers, divines, politicians, merchants, and, indeed, individual of all pursuits. On being introduced to a stranger, his affability, or the reverse, creates, instantaneously, a prepossession in his behalf, or awakens, unconsciously, a prejudice against him. To man, civility, is in fact, what beauty is to woman—it is a general passport to favor, a letter of recommendation, written in a language that every stranger understands. The best of men have often injured themselves by irritability and consequent rudeness, as the greatest soundrels have frequently succeeded by their plausible manners. Of two men, equal in all other respects, the courteous one has twice the chance for fortune.

MARRIED BY TELEGRAPH.—The Oswego (N. Y.) Times says: On Tuesday, 3d February, a marriage ceremony was performed by the Rev. William Carr, chaplain of the 4th Regiment New York State volunteers, under rather novel circumstances, the clergyman and bridegroom being in the city of Washington, and the bride in the village of Fulton, Oswego county, during the ceremony. The bridegroom is a member of the 4th Regiment, and circumstances prevented his being in Fulton to fulfill his engagement with the young lady. By mail the parties agreed to have the ceremony performed through the medium of the electric telegraph. The day and hour having been arranged, the parties repaired to the telegraph office at the respective places, the fair bride accompanied by a female friend as bridesmaid. The operator at Fulton officiated as bridesman. The first dispatch over the wires relating to the affair was from Washington, inquiring if the lady was present. An answer in the affirmative was returned, and the ceremony proceeded. Three messages were sent to Fulton and two transmitted to Washington, and the ceremony was completed. The last message from Washington was the declaration of the clergyman pronouncing the parties man and wife.

"An old salt," who had been on a bender, had got what might be termed sublimely mystified by his frequent imbibings of "the critter." Stivering along the street, he thought he would go to a theater, and pass the remainder of the evening. Following some men he thought bound on the same voyage, he found himself in what he thought to be the pit. But it happened to be in a meeting house, and the minister was preaching upon the text wherein is mentioned the sheep and the goats, and in order to make an impression upon his congregation he put the significant question: "Who would wish to be a goat?" and paused, and then with still greater emphasis said: "Who shall be a goat?"

Our tipsy sailor could not brook the delay, and he at once responded: "As nobody else (sic) will be it, I'll be the (sic) goat rather than the play (sic) should stop."

A Scotch pedestrian, attacked by three highwaymen, defended himself with great courage and obstinacy, but was at length overpowered, and his pockets rifled. The robbers expected, from the extraordinary resistance they had experienced, to lay their hands on some rich booty, but were not a little surprised to discover that the whole treasure which the sturdy Caledonian had been defending at the hazard of his life, consisted of no more than a crooked sixpence. "The deuce is in him," said one of the rogues; "if he had eighteen pence, I suppose he would have killed the whole of us!"

A Frenchman who had learned English wished to be particularly polite, and never neglected an opportunity of saying something pretty. One evening he observed to a lady, whose dress was fawn-colored, and that of her daughter pink: "Madam," said he, "your daughter is the pink of beauty." "Ah, monsieur, you Frenchmen always flatter," said the lady. "No, madam, I only speak the truth," said he, "and what all the world will allow, that your daughter is the pink, and your ladyship the drab of fashion!"

The Emperor of Austria has just ennobled a Hungarian Jew—an unusual act of liberality—which creates much comment in the Empire. Modesty in a woman is like color on her cheek—decidedly becoming, if not put on.
