

POETRY.

The Dream of the homeward-bound Voyager.

ORIGINAL.

Outstretched upon the heaving deck,
Beneath an awning's shade he lies,
Watching the sunset clouds that speck
The gorgeous west of tropic skies.

The murmuring sea, the placid sky,
The breeze that whispers low and near,
Borne o'er him, like lullaby,
That charm'd and sooth'd his childhood's ear.

He shuts his eyes, and sky and sea,
Like phantoms from his mind are gone;
Spell bound by sleep's soft grammar,
He lies in dream land all alone.

Alone! What voice of glad surprise,
Falls on his ear like music's tone?
Alone! What pair of glowing eyes
Are bent so fondly on his own?

A loving arm is round him flung,—
A warm cheek pressing close to his,—
Of all the dreams by poets sung,
Sure never one was sweet as this!

All doubt is banish'd from his soul,
Lost hopes awaken from their flight,—
No winner, panting at the goal,
Feels half so unalloyed delight.

A sudden thrill runs through his brain;
He starts—he breaks through slumber's thrall;
Ship, sky, and sea are there again,
And starry night bends over all.

I read no cabalistic page,
The simple facts are all I shew,—
A wisor seer, a deeper sage,
Must tell us if the dream proves true.

HOME.

Sweet home of my childhood! thy name I revere,
Thy bosom enfolds all my heart holds most dear,
In the spirit of youth, in the freshness of glee,
I sought but for pleasure, and found it in thee.

Thy hills and thy valleys, so verdant, so fair,
Where the breath of sweet flowers is borne on the air,
Where the bright face of nature is smiling in bloom,
Ah, shall I forget thee! No, 'tis not thy doom.

I wander afar from the land of the brave,
To the isles of the savage, far, far o'er the wave;
Yet, friends of my boyhood, where'er I may roam,
I shall always remember, "there's no place like home."
