HOMEWARD BOUND.

"Dulcis reminiscitur argos."—Virgil.

Aye! spread the sail! we're homeward bound,
And gaily o'er the water's dancing,
The spray in diamond showers around
From every rippling wavelet's breast,
From every curling billow's crest,
Is brightly in the sun-beams glancing
Where through the brine our prow is dashing,
A thousand rainbow-hues are beaming;
While past our sides with fitful gleaming,
Broad sheets of snow-white foam are flashing.

What though for many a weary night,
For many a wild and stormy day,
By fierce gales driven or fanned by light,
O'er ocean lies our trackless way;
Yet onward still through foaming surge,
Or summer seas our barque shall urge
Fearless her swift career;
And whose the heart that does not burn
Within him at the glad return
To all he holds most dear—
As ardent Hope enlivening throws
Her brightest colors o'er its close,
And whispers joys by Love in store
To soothe the tempest-worn on shore.

O! sweet, when falls the deepening gloom
Of night, to meet the fond caress—
The fresh trimmed fire, the cheerful room,
The looks replete with tenderness,
And all the nameless charms of home
Which soon this yearning heart shall bless,
When bidding glad farewell to care,
For sunny smiles that wait me there!

We're homeward bound! we're homeward bound!
Those words are like a magic spell,
A witchery is in their sound,
The exile's tongue alone can tell;
They conjure up in visions bright
The scenes of many a past delight
And youthful frolic mild;
The verdant fields where erst in glee
With bounding step and spirit free,
A happy, sinless child,
I loved long summer days to rove
Seeking wild flowers, the shadowy grove,
Far in whose mazy depths I strayed
Heedless of stile and pathway crossed,
Or on the green moss idly laid,
In wandering day-dreams lost;
Till startled by the jay's shrill cry
Ringing from some tall pine tree nigh,
As on its topmost quivering height
He perched to plume his pinions light—
The broad blue lake, whose placid breast
The bordering hazels bent to kiss,
Where the lone pickerel at rest
Laid floating motionless,
The clear cascade where joyously
I launched my tiny ship to sea,
And steered it through the froth and foam
Till safe from wreck it floated home—
The rustic bridge, the quaint old mill,
The elm tree moving o'er the rill
And white walled cottage on the hill,
Just as they seemed of yore.

These words have pictured all to sight,
In more than pristine beauty bright—
E'en now, I dream that danger past,
My home, my home is won at last,
The fond embrace once more,
The low breathed tones of Love, unheard
So long, the kindly greeting word
Have met me at the door;
And smiles that speak of banished fears,

And bright eyes sparkling through their tears,
Whose glances beam on me alone,
Have welcomed back the wandering one!
I know 'tis all a dream, but yet
I would not for this world forget
That dream; of every hope apart,
'Tis deeply graven on my heart,
Which throbs exultant at the sound
Of that glad cry, 'We're homeward bound!'
