

OUR HULA GIRLS ABROAD

THEIR HORSEBACK DASH IN FRISCO.

How Golden Gate Park Was Started by Mounted Apparitions in Divided Skirts.

The four hula girls who went to the United States some time ago have made a sensation in the coast metropolis, as witness this from the Examiner:

The way it all came about was that Meyer of the Wigwam had the dancers to entertain over Sunday while they waited to begin an engagement. For their education and his benefit he chartered eight saddle horses from a livery stable, that number being required because each of the maidens has a chosen companion from her native islands. The start from Mr. Meyer's place of business was made at 2:30 o'clock.

Encircled in long folds of red and yellow bunting the dancers emerged from their dressing room. The leader lightly put one foot in the stirrup. There was a glimmer and a gleam of white, and then she was in the saddle. She securely held her divided skirts by poking the cloth through the stirrups with her feet, and the long train flowed behind. The others followed her example.

The leader was Kini Kalai, a lighter complexioned young woman than the others, the best rider of all and the most proficient in the English language. She and Pauahi Pinao wore yellow skirts with blouses of black and wide-brimmed hats that were trimmed with yellow flowers. The costumes of the other two were the same as these, except that red was substituted for the yellow. The third of the riders was Nakai Kukelehiwa, and the only one with a pronounceable name was Annie Cooper, spelled "Ane Kupa" in Hawaiian.

Albert Meyer was grand marshal of the flying procession. To keep ahead he had to whip his pair of trotters to their fastest gait, and even then he occasionally lagged behind, and there stayed until the readjustment of the colored pan called for a slackening of the speed.

The woman rode at the right of their male companions, Kini Kalai at the head. They were entirely at ease in the saddle as Hawaiian women usually are, but for grace and evident skill that leader surpassed men and women alike.

Along Market street the travel was comparatively slow, but still fast enough to permit of little more than the sweeping vision of red and yellow. People rushed to the windows and shouted for the rest of their families. Women in Mother Hubbards gathered up the children and let them look upon the scene. Men poked their heads out from lodging apartments and rubbed the sleepy eyes that with the scant apparel, told of prolonged Sabbath rest.

At one second-story window a hair-dresser appeared. She had a curling iron in one hand and a bunch of radiant tresses in the other. Instantly at the adjoining window was seen another face—the fair young patron. The latter was presumably not attired for public appearance, but she pushed a large white screen before her and peered over the top of it—a feminine sort of an expedient which fully suited the end in view.

And the cavalcade still dashed on. Boys joined the procession and ran till out of breath. Dogs followed in howling relays. Golden Gate avenue gave an opportunity for finer speeding. Then only the ambitious bicyclists could keep up, and the ordinary vehicle strove vainly to stay even alongside of the press carriage. Shouts were sent ahead from house to house sufficiently fast to put everybody on the lookout.

The panhandle of the Park was reached. A mounted policeman in gray essayed to challenge the leader, but his horse took fright and dashed with him into the thick shrubbery. Spectators stood amazed.

Then there was a roundup at the music stand. Thousands deserted the strains of "Cavallera Rusticana" and turned to the Cavalleria Kanaka, so to speak.

The wait was but of a moment, when down the broad road to the ocean beach the horses' heads were turned. Half the people who had carriages tried to follow. Some troopers from the Presidio did escort duty for a mile or so, then wheeled about and went back through the Park.

At the Cliff House, refreshments that Mr. Meyer ordered were taken straight. Miss Kukelehiwa, with an air of simple modesty, revealed some of the mysteries of the Hawaiian toilet by coaxing a stocking back into place. Pauahi Pinao smoked a cigarette. Kini Kalai took off her yellow-trimmed hat and coiled her hair anew.

Men stared, but the Kanaka maidens cared not. Down the hill they retraced their way and paused before a tinsy gallery to get souvenirs of the day—perchance to show in the far island realm what here they used for the native costume.

Back to the city they went, as gaily as on the outward gallop and amid confusion all as intense. They returned to the theater, and there they doffed the red and yellow and put on the plain and somber black of their holokus, the ordinary street dresses.

Kinikalai spoke for the crowd. She said: "Fine road; fine houses; fine park." And then she added: "Fine ladies; fine dresses; fine times." She can freely converse in the English tongue, but these words alone she needed to express her thoughts.

THE COUNCIL MEETING.

THE POST OFFICE SAVINGS BANK BILL.

Much Time Used Up in Discussing the Bill to Regulate the Use of Explosives.

NEARLY FATAL.

Henry Renjes Severs Three Arteries in His Left Hand.

What came nearly being a fatal accident happened to Henry Renjes, the well-known member of the firm of Schaefer & Co., at his residence in Nuuanu valley, a little after five o'clock yesterday evening. While opening a bottle of imported soda water with a patent lever corkscrew the bottle burst, one piece of the glass entering the hand with which Mr. Renjes was holding the bottle, inflicting a fearful gash and severing three arteries. No immediate means of stopping the flow of blood being at hand Mrs. Renjes did the best she could by tying a tight ligature under her husband's arm, and summoning the services of Dr. Cooper. Before the latter's arrival, however, Mr. Renjes had lost about four quarts of blood, in spite of the bandage, and had the doctor's coming been delayed a few minutes longer his services would have been useless. As it is, the physician says that Mr. Renjes owes his life to his wife's promptitude in bandaging his arm.

SPECIMENS OF BLIGHT.

Are Wanted to be Forwarded on the Australia.

To give people an idea of the good work now being done by Commissioner Marsden in his fight against the blight and other pests, it may be mentioned that he has prepared a number of specimens of every kind that has come to his notice for shipment to California by the Australia. They will be forwarded to experts for thorough examination and classification, and with the further view of finding out whether insects of any kind can be imported which would have a deterrent effect on the scourge. With this in view Mr. Marsden asks the co-operation of all those interested in the subject, and requests that any specimens of blight outside of the usual well known varieties be sent to him on or before next Tuesday.

KNIGHTS OF PYTHIAS.

Will Bid Farewell to Wilder and Honor McCarthy.

On Saturday evening next at 8:30 at the Arlington Hotel a farewell dinner will be given to Charles T. Wilder, the new Consul to San Francisco, by his brother members of the Knights of Pythias. At the same time the occasion is also intended as an expression of regard to the newly appointed Deputy Supreme Chancellor, C. J. McCarthy. Covers will be laid for sixty, and as far as the menu is concerned, the fact that Mine Host Krouse has been given orders to spare no expense should satisfy the most fastidious epicurean.

At Sans Souci.

A large crowd attended the concert and dinner given at Sans Souci last evening. Mr. Frieman, the new manager, who is a man of large catering experience, took charge immediately upon his arrival yesterday and the dinner he served was one of the best ever eaten in Honolulu. The grounds were beautifully decorated with Chinese lanterns and were taxed to their utmost extent to accommodate the numerous guests that assembled to hear Prof. Berger and his band. Dancing, bathing and boating were indulged in to a late hour and every one went away with the hope that Sans Souci would soon have another concert.

A Chance for Young Men.

J. L. Howard of the Stockton and Fresno business colleges is in this city and will canvass among the young men for students for those institutions. The colleges teach shorthand, penmanship, bookkeeping, commercial arithmetic, correspondence and law, typewriting, music, elocution and languages. Mr. Howard is at the Arlington, where he may be seen by those interested.

Getting Impatient.

Lieut. Lucien Young has received a letter from his brother, a prominent Democratic politician of the bluegrass State, in which it is said that Kentucky sentiment is getting very impatient over President Cleveland's delay in bringing annexation about.

Making Good Progress.

J. L. Howard, who has recently come from California, states that annexation sentiment there is gaining ground. It seemed to ebb for a time but is now mounting to a flood. The same state of things, Mr. Howard says, exists in the Eastern States.

Well Remembered Here.

J. Philip Smith and wife have notified friends in this city that they will pass through Honolulu on the China, which is due to arrive on the 19th. They are in the Adolph Spreckels party. It is not thought that they will stop over.

Student Presentations.

The students at Oahu College today presented Prof. J. Q. Wood a fine Waltham gold watch, and Miss L. F. Dale a necklace with pearl and diamond pendant. Both Professor Wood and Miss Dale are retiring teachers.

NEWS IN A NUTSHELL.

The drum corps will meet for practice this evening at 7:30 o'clock at the Queen Street Armory.

On account of alterations, the Bernice Pauahi Bishop Museum will be closed after Saturday, June 17th.

Harrison Bros. have commenced hauling material on the site of the Bishop addition to the Queen's hospital.

L. H. Dee has taken out a dealer's spirit license and will transport business at Hotel street, between Nuuanu and Fort streets.

The New York Sun's Hawaiian correspondent prints extended criticisms of Blount and Nordhoff in the issues of June 1st, 15th and 24th.

Kaolaha was fined $100 last Tuesday for the play in the District Court, and was bailed in this afternoon on the same charge.

The employees of the Spreckels plantations on the other islands who belong to the Annexation Club have announced their intention of resigning from the same.

The New York Sun quotes the Star's first editorial on Nordhoff in full, and gives prominence on its editorial page to a letter from this office on the same subject.

Extra attractions are offered at Lohéide's school of stentling at the old Army building on Saturday night in the shape of two or three boxing matches between members of his class.

Sadie Nelson, stewardess of the Australia, was fined $500 and six months imprisonment in the District Court to-day for having opium in her possession on the last trip of that vessel.

School Commencement.

Kamehameha school will have graduating exercises this evening at Kawai-ahoa church. The program includes debates, compositions, class prophecy, salutatory, valedictory, etc., with music by orchestra, glee club and Professor Berger's band.

The graduating class this year consists of fourteen members as follows: David Ai, Robert Baker, Henry Blake, Isaac Harbottle, James Harbottle, Matthew Hoonani, Kail Kanehe, Noah Kauhane, Moses Kawaue, Solomon Mahelona, Samuel Mahuka, William Meheula, Abraham Pihl and John Wahinehakaiki.

New Departure.

L. H. Dee, proprietor of the Criterion saloon, leaves on the outgoing Australia for San Francisco, for the purpose of purchasing a large stock of wines, liquors, cigars, etc. He proposes to establish a general jobbing business on Hotel street, between Fort and Nuuanu, and will be prepared to accommodate all wishing anything in his line. He will, as he has heretofore done, act as the sole agent of the John Wieland Brewing Company of San Francisco.

Fell From a Tree.

At Punahou Preparatory school yesterday, Willie Maertens, who had climbed a tree in the school yard, fell twenty-five feet, dislocating a wrist, bruising his skull and suffering internal hurts. The fall was caused by the breaking of a branch. Dr. J. S. McGrew was called and did all he could for the sufferer. At last accounts the boy was in a critical condition.

Somewhat Mixed.

The accounts of the Masonic lunches are still in an unsettled state, owing to the presentation of an unexpected bill. It is hoped that the matter will be arranged by to-morrow, so that everything can be cleaned up.

Died From Want of Respiration.

While listening to the band concert last night a STAR reporter heard a couple of natives discussing the recent decease of one of their race. One asked, "What was the matter with him?" The other replied, "Well, I don't know what you would call it in native, but the English call it 'want of respiration,' to which the other responded "How he must have suffered."
