Then follows a hearty chorus:

Then give three cheers and three cheers more For the tar who never runs his ship ashore.

The sentimental gems are numerous. In a beautiful duet between the tenor and soprano the soprano sings:

Words of love too loudly spoken Ring their own untimely knell; Noisy vows are rudely broken. Soft the song of Philomel. Whisper sweetly, whisper lowly. Hour by hour and day by day: Sweet and low as accents holy. Are the notes of lovers' lay.

One fine unaccompanied chorus runs:

Eagle eye in cloudland soaring, Sparrow twittering on a reed, Tiger in the jungle roaring, Frightened fawn in grassy mead. Let the eagle, not the sparrow, Be the object of your arrow; Fix the tiger with your eye, Pass the fawn in pity by; Glory then will crown the day, Glory, glory, any way.

Encores were frequent. All the performers were called before the curtain. At the close Gilbert and Sullivan were twice called out. Sullivan shook Gilbert heartily by the hand. There were cheers but no speeches.

How it Feels to Be Blown Up with Dynamite.

Propped up in bed in a back room of the Curtin boarding house, John Curtin, Jr., patiently notes the passing of the hours. His hands are scarred by fire and his arms bandaged, but he makes no murmur. He is only a boy in years, but it has befallen him to undergo an experience more impressive and tragic than ordinarily comes to mortals. Of the little group who stood laughing in front of the Curtin house last Sunday morning four were killed and one so sadly maimed that death could come only as a blessing. The boy alone survived with nothing worse than a shock and bruises that will soon pass away.

"How does it feel to be blown up with dynamite?" he said in answer to the question. "Well, I can hardly tell you. You see it's so sudden. It's over just about the time you begin to understand that something is happening. You know I had the satchel in my hand, and had put it down. Then I got afraid of it. All at once everything was light. I don't think I saw the flash. Anyway, my face was not exactly toward the explosion. But then everything got light, lighter than day—kind of blinding. There was an awful crash. I was scared, of course, and wanted to get away. It was just as if I was having a nightmare.

"Some way, though, I knew just what the matter was. A man can think faster than he has any idea of, I know that some of the others were nearer the explosion, and I said to myself: 'They're blown overboard, sure.' You understand this was all in a second, all at once really. Then it was exactly the same as if I had been hit with a club. I thought it was a big club, bigger than any man could swing, and that it must be worked with machinery. It hit me on the head and all over. I went sailing into the air a long, long way. My ears roared and the wind blew into my face.

"I knew when I struck the ground, for I remember saying to myself, 'Well, I'm done for.' I don't know just when I lost my right senses or when they came back, but when they did come back it seemed queer that I was there yet. I thought I had been thrown somewhere else. I could feel fire burning me. It was my clothes. They were smoking and almost blazing. "I was lame all over and could not bear very well. My voice sounded like somebody else was talking. That's all I can tell you about being blown up. I just wonder that it didn't kill me like it did others."—S. F. Examiner.

A PROJECT OF FEDERATION.

It May Result in a Congress of the Five Central American Republics.

All but one of the presidents of the five republics of Central America have within a short time expressed a desire for the formation of a federal union, under which the several governments may exist together in harmony and may be relieved from those civil and inter-republican wars which have brought misery upon them. The question is of the highest interest to the countries concerned, and it is attracting notice in the diplomatic circles of all the governments with which these countries have political and commercial relations. Our own relations with Central America are highly important and are always under consideration in the state department.

There is an authentic report from Managua that the new government of Nicaragua has formally invited the other republics to unite with it as members of a great Central American federation, to be established upon broad principles that shall be mutually acceptable and shall be maintained with all the power at the command of the parties interested. President Zelaya recently sent a diplomatic agent to Guatemala to promote this object, and it is understood that the agent, General Baza, received a satisfactory amount of encouragement. The facts in the case have doubtless been communicated to our government by Dr. Francisco Gomez, the Nicaraguan minister in Washington. The consistent assembly is now in session at Managua, and the federal project is to be laid before it by Zelaya, whose party was successful in the August elections. There is, of course, always danger that the project will end in smoke, as the country is never safe against revolution, but if President Zelaya shall be able to retain his power in Nicaragua he will surely adhere to his cherished purpose of organizing a federation of republics.

It was believed at one time that the government of San Salvador would present an insuperable obstacle to the carrying out of the federal project, but this opinion has been dispelled, at least in some measure, by President Zelaya. He declares that he does not stand in opposition to the idea of federation, and merely objects to the method of it that has been proposed. He desires that the Central American capital shall be established in his country, and he demands certain other concessions which cannot easily be granted by the four other governments. He recently held a conference on the subject with the Salvadorean military leaders, and it has been ascertained that nearly all of them regard the project with disfavor, holding that the country should always maintain an attitude of complete independence and should refuse to submit to the dictation of other powers in any matter whatever. President Zelaya may be able to overcome these objections before the meeting of the general Central American congress.

The government of Guatemala, both under President Barrios and his successor, President Reina, has taken a decided favor of the federation. In a recent interview President Reina spoke hopefully of the prospect of forming it, saying that it must be founded in a peaceful spirit by peaceful means, and that allowance must be made for the prejudices and predilections of all the countries consenting to its formation. The population of Guatemala are anxious that the general congress of delegates shall be convened as soon as possible and will be represented in it by representatives of a progressive kind. The government of Honduras is even more desirous of federation than any other government, excepting that of Nicaragua. The newly elected chief of state, President Vasquez, whose predecessor in office was General Liva, has given his views on the subject in direct language, and he has the backing of the Honduran congress. He is an astute and determined politician, and it is not improbable that he will take a leading part in the new movement for the reorganization of the public system of Central America.

Very little is known here concerning the attitude of the government of Costa Rica toward the project, but there are reasons for believing that that country will not stand aloof if it be found that a federation can be peacefully constituted. President Rodriguez is not unaware of the course of events. It is conceivable that the project of federation may be carried into effect, since after the assembling of the congress of Central American republics, it will not be a novelty in the history of that part of the world. Seventy years ago a federation was there formed, but it lasted for 10 years, and subsequently there were several attempts to re-establish it, one of which was in 1873, when the five countries held a conference, in which the prospects were hopeful for a time, but which closed without securing the desired result.—Washington Cor. New York Sun.

The Deland Football Tricks.

The main interest in the tactics of football in the coming season centers about the Deland tricks, in which Harvard supporters place such trust. Of these, the now celebrated flying wedge is the only one that is generally understood. In the tackle wedge and the one or two nameless tricks that were publicly attempted last fall, the players were so closely guarded that it was impossible to make out their working exactly. The use of the tricks was sparing, moreover, because, though they had succeeded repeatedly when tried by the Harvard team against its second eleven, and even in some cases when tried by the second against the first eleven, it was feared that they could not be safely worked against Yale. This year their reputation is established. Mr. Deland is known to have tabulated over 60 plays, each with its counter-play, and he has already spent much time in teaching them to the Harvard eleven, so that the present season will doubtless prove as dramatic in its surprises as the past.—Outing.

Minnie Hank and Her Husband.

The emperor of Germany has just conferred the order of the house of Hohenzollern upon the Chevalier Ernst Hesse von Wartegg, thus adding another to the many decorations already possessed by the distinguished traveler, archaeologist and author. The chevalier, who is the husband of that quondam favorite of the English musical world, Miss Minnie Hank de Wartegg, is a man of great mental activity. Minnie Hank de Wartegg, who sings in the States in the autumn and will afterward accompany her husband upon a tour round the world.—London Queen.

She Manages a Coal Mine.

One of the few women who claim the distinction of holding a seat on the directorate board of a public company is the dowager Duchess of Sutherland. She is also credited with displaying great ability in the management of a coal mine.—London Correspondent.

Aim at the Drake And you are bound to hit some of the ducks. This is precisely the same with Wampole's Tasteless Preparation OF Cod Liver Oil.

It aims to cure Consumption, Hits the Mark, too, and it most effectually breaks up Colds, Coughs, Hoarseness and all Throat and Lung troubles that cause this disease. It is natural logic to conclude that if WAMPOLE'S PREPARATION OF COD LIVER OIL has power to prevent Consumption, it surely is able to cure these lesser emergencies. This vigor-making, fat producing preparation is Absolutely Tasteless, in so far as Cod Liver Oil is concerned. All your notice is a delightful flavor of Wild Cherry and Anise. But the purest Norwegian Cod Liver Oil is there all the same. It is a great blood enricher. Best of all it is a natural food that in its stomachic effects, actually assists its own assimilation. In Pulmonary or Bronchia troubles it is unequalled. No one doubts the value of Cod Liver Oil, but not every one is able to take it. WAMPOLE'S PREPARATION removes the nauseous objection and actually makes Cod Liver Oil palatable.
