SOMETHING WRONG.

A Policeman Meets a Man Who is Too Grateful. For five or six minutes the other afternoon a patrolman stood at the foot of Woodward avenue alongside of a young man who had a satchel in his hand and was waiting for a ferryboat. At length, as the officer started to saunter away, the young man handed him a cigar and said: "Thanks, I'll always remember your kindness."

"What is it?" queried the policeman as he hesitated over the cigar. "Take it—take two of 'em! I'm a man who can appreciate a favor."

"But I—"

"That's all right—take three of 'em. I've traveled over most of this country and know a man when I see him."

"Will you explain yourself?" asked the officer as he closely regarded the stranger to see if he was drunk or crazy.

"Certainly. Here I am, a perfect stranger to you. You have the right to walk up and crack me with your club and ask me in thunder I am and what I am hanging around here for. You could take my satchel and fling it into the river, and you could drag me to a dangerous cell and keep me imprisoned for years and years. Have you done anything of the sort?"

"As to that"—began the officer, but the young man brought out two more cigars and said:

"Take the whole five! I haven't much wealth, but I want to show my gratitude as best I can. You, sir, are one of nature's noblemen, and though I live for the next 20 years I shall never forget you. Instead of cracking me over the head and then jumping on my unassuming body with both feet and dragging me to the station over the cobblestones, you have acted the part of a gentleman. I am, and I respect the rights of others. Sir, let me again assure you that I shall never forget this consideration on your part. Officer, farewell!"

He made a break for the boat and was lost to view, and after thinking it over for five minutes the officer pocketed the cigars and growled:

"Something wrong there somewhere. If I ever see him again, I'll run him in for his gratitude."—Detroit Free Press.

Society News of the Future.

Here is a dream a society young woman had the other night after registering and then attending a swell military wedding. She dreamed she had been at a wedding and picked up a paper and read this account, which was dated May 20, 1920:

"The bride looked well in the conventional wedding gown of the usual white satin, but all eyes were centered on the groom. His suit of dark cloth fitted perfectly the manly form, and a large boutonniere ornamented his coat lapel, and in his daintily gloved hand he carried a bunch of flowers. His hair was cut in the very latest style, and the delicately scented oil which plastered it in place laid a dainty perfume in the air as he passed. The girls all envied the bride for carrying off such a prize, and he will be sadly missed now that he is married. He is most popular in society, his many accomplishments, his tender graces and winning ways having won him many friends. He has done well in his marriage, as the bride is mayor of a western town, before which time she drew a good salary as a brewer's agent. He will therefore miss none of the luxuries to which he is accustomed. A crowd of pretty and attractive young men showered the couple with rose petals as they drove away."—Chicago Evening Post.

"Better Still."

Accounting For His Disappearance. "What has become of your living skeleton?" "Buried yesterday." "Dear me! His demise was sudden?" "Yes. You see, he fell in love with the female Samson." "Yes." "She didn't like his attentions." "Well?" "She shook him."—New York Press.

SKIN DISEASE

CURED BY Ayer's Sarsaparilla. Mr. Geo. W. Hartner, Keosauqua, Va., writes, as follows:

"Shortly after leaving college, I was troubled with a skin disease which showed itself first on the neck. Physicians pronounced it eczema, and treated me for that complaint. The eruption crept slowly over my face and on the body, until it enveloped the whole frame. It gave me infinite trouble with constant itching, crusting of dry scales, and a watery liquid which would not dry up."

Wrote from under the scales, I treated it for over three years unsuccessfully, and was unable to check it, until I began using Ayer's Sarsaparilla. I used three bottles of the medicine and was completely cured—my skin becoming as soft and clear as before."

How It Might Easily Be Differently Interpreted by Different Persons.

In the opinion of James V. Iot of Scotland the Spanish ambassador, a man of great learning, had the idea, but in every university there should be a professor of signs, whose duty should be to make men of various countries understand each other by signs, thus doing away with the tedious and laborious process of learning different languages. The ambassador was one day lamenting to the king this deficiency in our university education when he, for a joke, said that this important branch of education was not neglected in Scotland; that Aberdeen had such a professor. The Spaniard at once declared that he would go and see him. The king was unable to dissuade him, and finding himself in an awkward position wrote to the university and desired its professors to make the best of the affair in some way. Scarcely had the letter announcing the ambassador's expected arrival reached Aberdeen when the ambassador himself appeared. The professors had not had time to concert any plan and were at their wits' end. One of them chanced to recount their dilemma to the butcher, a wagtail friend, bled in one eye and quick at repartee. "Why, then," said he, "I could do it myself, since 'tis but to keep still and make signs."

Modern Plays.

"Why is it that in so many of the plays written nowadays the really interesting portions are found in the earlier acts, while in the last act there is hardly anything developed that was not previously known to those who had watched the progress of the piece?" This question, put rather abruptly to a well known dramatist, elicited the following reply: "Simply because a man who writes a play is thinking of the dramatic critics, just as a man who writes a story is thinking of the magazine editors to whom he proposes to sell it. Now it is a well known fact that a great many critics are obliged to leave a theater on the first night of a production, before the end of the play, and the dramatist, must see that his climax occurs before this general exodus. If he does not, he is liable to read in half a dozen papers the next morning that his play was altogether lacking in action and did not contain a single really strong scene. I have been through the mill myself in connection with others of my craft, and for that reason, when I write a four act play, I take pains to make my third act as strong as possible, after which I can afford to let the fourth act take care of itself. A drop in the third act, by which I mean a lessening in dramatic interest, is fatal to my piece, but the public nowadays do not expect much in a last act except a sort of smoothing out of entanglements and explaining away of matters that stood between the final reconciliation of the hero and heroine."—New York Sun.

Mrs. Wayoff—And this picture is— "That is Noble. I suppose you are perfectly familiar with the story of Mrs. Wayoff—No, I can't say that I just recall it. There's a good many of the neighbors I'm not yet acquainted with.—Chicago Inter Ocean.

Visitor—How do you like your new neighbors? Little Boy—I don't like them at all! They're too quiet.

Visitor—Too quiet? Little Boy—Yes, Ma'ma makes me keep still all the time so she can hear what they're doing.—Good News.
