A MAD EXPLOIT.

By ALFRED E. CALHOUN.

(Copyright, 1895, by the Author.)

"Yet you voluntarily assumed the uniform of a Union officer, deliberately forged or combed at the forging of papers that would lead to the desert and then came into this camp, claiming to be a friend. Is not this true?"

"What was your purpose?" Before Dunlap could reply to Colonel Baird's question Anton interrupted: "My assistant knows nothing about my purpose in coming here. Whatever guilt there may be in the offense attaches to me. He regarded the enterprise as a romantic affair, a masquerade that meant no injury to the enemy nor help to his friends."

"How old are you, Mr. Dunlap?" "Twenty-four." "Are you an officer in Bragg's army?" "I am."

"And you consider yourself entirely responsible for all your own acts?" "I do."

"I believe that is all. Does any other member of the court wish to examine the prisoner?"

Colonel Baird looked about the table, and the officers of the court shook their heads and compressed their lips. Anton and Dunlap were taken into an adjoining room, and Colonel Baird said to the court:

"Gentlemen, the prisoners are charged with being spies. You have heard their confessions and the evidence of Lieutenant Wharton as well as the dispatches from headquarters. How say you—guilty as charged or not guilty?"

"As if spoken by one man, the response was, 'Guilty as charged.'"

"Is there any exception to the finding?" "There was none. The verdict having been given, the penalty followed as a matter of course. Death, immediate death by hanging, has long been the recognized method of disposing of a convicted spy in war times, yet Colonel Baird shuddered as he contemplated the duty thus forced upon him."

"I will telegraph to headquarters for instructions," he said. "Meanwhile it might be well to communicate the findings to the prisoners and to ascertain, if possible, their motive in entering our lines."

Colonel Baird at once telegraphed General Gardfield:

"The prisoners, Anton and Dunlap, have confessed to the crime and the other lieutenant to the rebel army. What shall I do with them?"

"Take the confessions in writing and hang them forthwith."

Colonel Watkins and Captain Singer—to the journal of the latter I am indebted for many of the details—with other members of the court, visited the prisoners. The colonel told them of the findings and left them to infer the result.

That Anton, to continue his assumed name, was brave to recklessness his present condition showed, but the strain of the past few hours had told on him terribly, and anxiety for his young companion, even more than fear for himself, made him intensely nervous and almost hysterical.

"I am not a spy," he said. "I am a soldier, we are not spies!" "I would be unjust to you and to myself," said Colonel Watkins, "if I held out any hope. The findings of the court, based on your own confessions, are known by this time at headquarters, and there can be but one response. That you are both well bred gentlemen is evident, and this fact but intensifies the wonder why such men should voluntarily place themselves in such a position, particularly when the chances of detection were so great."

"We did not expect to find any officers of the old army here," said Anton. "You came from General Forrest?" "From his camp, yes, but we do not belong to his command, nor was it our purpose to obtain information for his use."

"What command were you attached to?" "Bragg's." "And your position?" "I am attached to Bragg's staff as chief of artillery, and my companion is an aide."

"What was your purpose in entering our lines if not to get information for Forrest?" "I thought we could make a hurried tour of all your outposts and get back to headquarters without detection."

READ WHAT Ayer's Sarsaparilla

did for the Invalid Daughter of a Prominent Lowell Tradesman.

"My daughter, of the most time being troubled with violent headaches and sleeplessness, she was unable to do any thing but lie in bed, and she was very nervous and very irritable, she took various remedies for her trouble, but she could not be cured until she commenced using Ayer's Sarsaparilla."

Ayer's Sarsaparilla. After taking half a bottle, she began to feel better. By a continued use of this medicine, she was cured of her troubles, and she is now as healthy as a young girl.

Architecture. The remedy must begin with the foundation. The problem which I long endeavored to have put before the students in architecture while I was a director of the Institute of Technology consisted of the question with which I was called upon to deal myself. I would make the problem given out to students in every school of architecture, to the extent of one-half the number submitted, of a prosaic type. One of the layouts of an industrial town, choosing as a possible site a bit of unoccupied land somewhere in the neighborhood of the city, with a stream running through it, corresponding to a site by a river where power might be generated, or by a landing place for the fuel from which the power might be derived.

To one pupil I would assign the layout of the land, to another the water supply and drainage; to another the construction of the principal factory; to another the construction of the lesser workshops; to another the grocer's and other shops; to another the houses of dwelling; to another the other the separate dwellings; to others the Catholic and Protestant churches; to another the hospital, and to another the school-houses. Here you have the real problems of American industrial life, scarcely one of which has yet been taught or solved in the right way, so as to combine true art with utility and safety.—Edward Atkinson.

The Kaiser as a Latin Student. Emperor William's love of the use of Latin quotations is an excellent Latin scholar, due to the splendid training at the University of Göttingen—was illustrated again recently in his telegram to the Berlin Regatta Wauson society. "Navigare necesse est, vivere necesse," wrote his majesty in the course of his congratulatory words. The saying, it may be remembered, is that of Pompey, and is to be found in chapter 20 of Plutarch's biography.

In order to prevent a famine in Rome in the year 57 B. C., Pompey was empowered to import as much grain as possible to the city. He had 100 assistants. In order to assure the success of his work he went in person to Sicily, Sardinia and Africa. When on the point of returning home, a terrible storm broke for him, and the sailors refused to put to sea with the load of grain. Pompey sprang into one of the ships and commanded the anchors to be raised, adding: "It is necessary that we sail; it is not necessary that we live." This classical remark is engraved over the entrance to the famous "Scaenofranchus" in Bremen.—New York Tribune.

Incandescent Lights. People who use incandescent lights should always keep in mind the fact that the danger ever lurking about the brilliant little illuminators. It is an easy matter to experiment without going into the technicalities of electric science. Of course you will say 50 or 100 volts will not do much harm, but don't be too sure of that, and particularly don't imagine that 50 or 100 volts is all your little wire will carry.

Sometimes the incandescent gets crossed with a high circuit wire. In that case it is expected by the electrician that the safety fuse will blow out and thus cut off the connections, but sometimes this fuse does not result. I could cite many instances in which it did not, and as a consequence disaster resulted. No matter how much care is taken to make the lights safe, there is always danger in fooling with lightning. Never attempt to turn on the light should the floor be wet, for a ground circuit is a deadly thing, and don't take hold of the metal fixtures with one hand and then use the other to turn on the light. The precautions are easily observed.—Boston Transcript.

THE NEW WAUKEGAN BARBED WIRE. Made only by Washburn & Moen Mfg Co.

We have been appointed Agents for the above Company, and have just received our Steamer "KEAUBOU" the first shipment of this famous barbed wire. We sell the "Waukegan" 4 Point with barbs 3 in. apart, and it measures 10 1/2 ft. to the pound. You cannot build a fence with any other make of barbed wire as cheap as you can with "Waukegan."

Take the following makes for instance, all 4 point, barbs 3 in. apart: N. and M. 15.30 ct. to 1 lb. or 7.84 per cent. in favor of Waukegan

Waukegan Barbed Wire is as strong as the strongest, contains just as many barbs to the foot, and yet weighs less per rod than any other style of barbed wire. This result is accomplished by using a half round wire in the barb, instead of a full round wire as in all other barbed wires; then it is twisted out around one of the main wires, thus saving the weight of additional wire. This wire is thoroughly galvanized, something much needed in this climate.

We also sell a special wire stretcher and galvanized steel staples for Waukegan Wire.

All orders for the above, or for plain Galvanized or Black Fence Wire and Staples will be promptly filled at lowest prices by
