Let the trade talk, if any at all is to be maintained, be more reasonable.

Mr. W. R. Castle will have the consolation of knowing he is not the first man who talked too much.

"Beware of the awful fate of the water drunkard" is the way they warn against cholera contagion in San Francisco.

It is hoped for the sake of Honolulu that direct cargoes from the coast to new ports on the other islands will be the exception rather than the rule.

The town shows a remarkable weakness for the filthiest story. It gloats over the most absurd rumors just as San Francisco rolls the sweet morsel of the miserable Durrant trial under its diseased tongue.

By the death of Poomakelani there passes away a Hawaiian woman held in the highest esteem by all. She loved her people and was always exerting herself in their behalf. In return the princess had the unreserved regard and aloha of the entire race.

It would not be out of the way at all for the Government to undertake to supply fish. Let the uncontaminated article be secured and handled by officials. Any other system would tend to encourage the methods of monopoly. The strict tabu on a home article is a hardship to many foreigners as well as to all the natives. It does seem that with a little effort in the direction of management this really important matter of fish could be easily and satisfactorily arranged.

There has been another case of the Hawaiian cholera. The victim is an aged inmate of the insane asylum. This institution is in an infected district. It is surrounded by tar patches irrigated from contaminated sources. The case is plain as a shooting, a shooting, a railroad or building accident. Than any of these it is no more threatening to the health of people here or elsewhere. Very soon now the possibility of another case of tar patch cholera will be removed. The polluted waters are being attended to very thoroughly. Even the growing tar is being destroyed. The many springs in that locality are posted kapu and are guarded. The asylum inmates will be kept from the fields till the cleansing is finished. This man took on the infection five days before he was stricken.

The Nuuanu stream trouble will not down. Every day new difficulties and new problems confront those wrestling with the project. The matter of expense is ever present. This involves dealing with scores of people. Then the engineers, the sanitary experts, the contractors and the laymen offer varying plans requiring money of amount from within the allowance to ten times that sum. The suggestion brought forward by THE STAR, and given again on a local page, is from practical men and has met with favorable consideration. Its strong point is that it will obviate the necessity of extensive purchase transactions by the use of land now owned by the Government. It should be evident and probably is evident to every citizen that here and now in the life of Honolulu and Hawaii this stream must be purified and placed under control. In its present condition it is a menace to health and a dragging weight on the train of progress.

Once more a plea is made for the business men of Honolulu. The Health Board is not giving them the consideration which is their due. Repeatedly at meetings all members of the Board have agreed, each speaking for himself, that there was absolutely no danger or risk attending the shipment of goods. Then, and without other reason than flimsy sentiment, the Board regularly votes to postpone even consideration of a partial resumption of traffic. This may be all very well from some mysterious, unexplained standpoint. The Board members may be satisfied in their own minds with the conclusions they have reached. But how about the merchant who has not been able to send a thing from his stock for six weeks and who sees trade slipping from his grasp? How about the heavy proportion of the community having its days of property or adversity regulated by the big and little houses? How about the small dealers who have expenses piling up and with whom the absence of receipts conjures up a vivid outlook of ruin? How about the scores upon scores of people who depend on tourists patronage? How about the schools? Are all these to suffer on account of indecision? Is the present and discouraging condition to continue when it is a positive fact that there is no epidemic here?

THE BICYCLE WAS POISONED. Fearful Effects of the Bite of a Large Snake on a "Bike".

To our ears, there have been many wonderful rattlesnake stories, painted with glowing colors of truthfulness, but never in our long experience has such a one as here related been reported.

It is an entirely modern snake story, and it relates the old rusty tale of eight. It truly belongs to the new era. It is a bicycle snake story—a regular safety, pneumatic tire snake story—a snake that would make the hair on a tiger's back and make Bill Nye turn green with envy.

But it is a true and true story and was related to us by a young gentleman who is good looking and truthful. While telling the adventure to us his left black eye dilated and his black mustache bristled.

"I took a ride on my bicycle," said he, "on an unimpaired new Augusta. The sun was blazing down at a South African rate. Working on my trusty steed the way home, after a good long spin, suddenly my attention was drawn to an object in the distance of immense proportions. Coming nearer I soon saw that it was a large rattlesnake.

Return I could not, neither was I willing if I could, and I supposed that by this time the snake had discovered me, for it lay silently in my path. As I approached nearer and nearer it coiled tighter and tighter for battle. On seeing this I of course formed my plan for action also.

There was no escape, and as quick as lightning I rode over the rattler to rattle no more. His snakehood rebounded as if he were made of rubber.

"I glanced hastily over my shoulder and saw a disintegrated mass. I then knew that I had killed the reptile. On around home I put my safety in its usual place.

"The next morning I used to use it to take my usual exercise. On bringing it before the light I found the place of the tubing faded away, and in its place there was a dark, dull, blue color overgrowing my once magnificent and shining wheel.

Since then the pneumatic tire has decayed so that I had to have it completely overhauled. The cause of the complete disintegration of my prized wheel is that the snake in its rage sank its poisonous fangs in the tire, thus causing the poison to spread all over the cycle.

"On going back to the scene of the combat a few days later I found the dried bones of my antagonist and 21 large rattles, the snake measuring exactly 8 feet and six inches."—Millen Herald.

Revealed by Death. "Life is perfected by death," and it is also revealed. A story told in the "Life of Sir Richard Burton" illustrates the clearance with which death reveals a man to his comrades.

A lieutenant in a British regiment was honest, steady, quiet and full of sterling qualities, but he was dull, reserved and religiously inclined. His brother officers laughed at him and associated but little with him. Though well born, he was poor and had no powerful friends. He therefore remained without promotion or society, but he never complained and did his best.

A battery was to be taken to the Crimea, and the lieutenant's regiment was selected as the storming party. It assembled and was driven back. The lieutenant rallied his own company, and with a lunging thrust he shook before him and rushed through the breach into the battery, followed by a handful of men. They never came out again.

That night at the regimental mess there was not a man but regretted that he had not better understood the officer whose gallant death had revealed his superiority. All remembered a thousand good qualities and incidents which ought to have endeared him to them. They were ashamed of the contempt with which they had treated him, and the fact that they had never shown him the least kindness.—Youth's Companion.

THE COMING WOMAN Will probably carry life insurance to protect her husband and children when the bread winner is gone, and thus prevent the poor, weak man from having to battle with the cold, hard world.

Even today, many women need life insurance as much as men. Some women need it more than men. A man dies and leaves his wife, who will probably be able to provide for the children. A widow leaves no one to protect and care for the little ones. In the Equitable Life Assurance Society women's policies are issued at the same rate as those for men.
